VOL. XII---NO. 3534. NEW-YORK, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 21, 1863. PRICE THREE CENTS.

TWO DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

Arrival of the Kangaroo at this Port, and the Arabia at Halifax.

Rumors of French Intervention Once More.

NAPOLEON PROPOSING AN ARMISTICE.

Interviews of Mr. Dayton with the Emperor and the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Continued Refusal of England to Co-operate.

Addresses to President Lincoln from London and Birmingham.

Preparations for Receiving the First Lancashire Relief Ship.

Parliament to Meet on the 5th of February.

The screw-steamer Kangaroo Capt. JEFFREY, which left Liverpool at noon on the 7th, and Queenstown on the afternoon of the 8th January, arrived here last night. A summary of her news has already been published.

The mails of the Hibernian, which arrived off Portland on Monday evening, also reached this City last night.

The steamship Arabia, from Liverpool at 10½ o'clock, on the morning of the 10th, via Queenstown on the evening of the 11th inst., arrived at Halifax at 6½ o'clock last evening. Her dates are two days later than those already to hand.

The Arabia has thirty-five passengers for Boston. She did not sight Cape Race, and reports experienced fine weather during the passage.

The Liverpool Journal of Commerce says:

"We are enabled to state, on the best authority, that Capt. SEMMES intends to sail immediately for the East Indies. The contemplated change of cruising ground, on the part of the Alabama, has been known for some time by the initiated, and is only carrying out Capt. SEMMES' original programme."

THE AMERICAN WAR.

Mr. DAYTON, American Minister at Paris, had an audience with the Emperor NAPOLEON on New-Year's day.

The Bulletin de Paris says, that Mr. DAYTON had a private audience with the Emperor NAPOLEON on the 7th inst.

The Emperor is said to have recommended an armistice between the North and the South.

On the previous day, Mr. DAYTON had a conference, on the same subject, with the French Minister on Foreign Affairs.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times says, that since the defeat of the Federals at Fredericksburgh, the Emperor NAPOLEON has again turned his thoughts to American affairs. The correspondent is informed, on good authority, that steps have been taken, or are on the point of being taken, to resume the overtures already unsuccessfully made to the Lincoln Government, and this time, it is hoped, with a prospect of better results.

The English Government still continue to persevere in refusing to interfere in the American war in any way.

The London Army and Navy Gazette says the Confederate Generals have been overpraised. To stand and fight has been their great strategy. Not one of them seems to have made a campaign with a purpose. Not one has had the capacity to understand the value of victory. They have done anything but follow events and make good use of the energy and zeal of their soldiers. Let some leader arise on either side who can lead a few squadrons to press one of these broken armies and the war will not long languish in the bloody trial of gigantic skirmishes.

On New-Year's evening an address was voted to President LINCOLN at a large meeting in London, gotten up under the auspices of the Emancipation Society.

Mr. CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, American Minister at London, in acknowledging the address for transmission to President LINCOLN, said that he (Mr. ADAMS) had no doubt that the President would receive it as an encouraging testimonial of independent witnesses to the manner in which he (Mr. LINCOLN) was endeavoring to do his duty to his country and to mankind.

An address of sympathy to President LINCOLN was in the course of receiving signatures at Birmingham. It expresses a strong belief that the Federal cause is that of humanity, religion and freedom, and earnestly hopes for its success.

The Council of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce have adopted a resolution for giving a suitable reception to the officers of the first ship coming from America with provisions for the distressed operatives, and for conveying to the liberal donors the Chamber of Commerce's appreciation of the generous and friendly spirit which prompted the munificent contribution. The Chamber referred the action of the New-York Chamber of Commerce in regard to the Alabama to a Special Committee.

The main English journals attack the London Times with great bitterness, and indignantly repudiate its recent advocacy of Slavery on "Scriptural" grounds.

The Liverpool Post believes that a reaction will set in from this point, and that confidence will be lost in a journal which so unblushingly justifies Slavery.

The Paris Moniteur publishes an account of the battle of Fredericksburgh, by an eye-witness, and says that the Federals marched with a consciousness of impending disaster. The rapidity of the movements of the Confederates is described as marvelous. The Federals, on the contrary, are represented as having moved with slowness, and the incapacity of their Generals is not doubtfully spoken of.

GREAT BRITAIN.

A proclamation has been issued calling on the British Parliament to assemble on the 5th of February next.

There were rumors of a considerable reduction in the navy estimates.

A meeting to urge the restoration of the subsidy to the Galway line of steamers was about to be held in Dublin.

A ship with 1,700 bales of cotton from the Cape of Good Hope, grown from Sea Island seed, had reached Liverpool.

Another vessel had brought 350 bales of cotton from Portugal.

Large quantities of cotton seed were being imported into Liverpool and thence exported to new cotton fields.

The Liverpool Albion publishes the correspondence between Gen. JAMES WATSON WEBB, the American Minister, and Mr. CHRISTIE, the British Minister to the Court of Brazil.

The correspondence is of a personal and pugnacious character, and an affair of honor was at one time threatened.

A letter is also published from Gen. WEBB to Earl RUSSELL, complaining of Mr. CHRISTIE'S conduct.

FRANCE.

The monthly returns of the Bank of France show a decrease of cash on hand of 51,000,000 francs, and an increase in discounted bills of 84,000,000.

The bank of GUYON & Co., in Lyons, has suspended, owing to its transactions with a large cotton factory.

A new brigade for Mexico will embark about the middle of January.

The Minister of Public Works has received orders to inquire into the distress existing among the cotton operatives.

The Paris Bourse was, on the 10th inst., flat at 70f. 30c. for the Rentes.

ITALY.

SPAIN.

In the Spanish Congress, Señor MON accused England of using Spain to improve her relations with Mexico. He regretted that the Spanish Government had not gone on with the French.

Señor COLLANTES replied.

PRUSSIA.

The King, in reply to the New-Year's address, says that the present position of affairs is misunderstood. He intended to maintain and protect the Constitution. He was compelled to carry out what he considered to be essential to the welfare of the country, without regard to the fact of his being misunderstood.

Gen. WILLISEN, Prussian Ambassador at Turin, against whom strong grounds of exception were taken, was to be transferred to Rome, and Count USEDOM would succeed to the Turin Embassy.

TURKEY.

The ministerial crisis is over. KHEMIL PASHA is Grand Vizier, and ALI PASHA retains the portfolio of Foreign Minister.

It was rumored and expected that FUAD PASHA would be President of the Council.

BY TELEGRAPH TO ROCHE'S POINT.

MADRID, Saturday, Jan. 10.

In the Spanish Congress Señor OLOZAGO is speaking on Mexican affairs. He says that Spain should support the candidature of a Spanish Prince for the throne of Mexico. The only hope for the Mexicans is that they shall triumph over foreign invasion. He declares that the Government ought to have given instructions for the present establishment of a monarchy in Mexico. Spain had lost two millions of piastres and a number of soldiers by embarking in the expedition against Mexico, and no benefit had resulted to her from it. The Spanish Government should have disapproved of the reembarkation of Gen. PRIM, and sent the Spanish troops back; or, if they had felt unable to do this, they should have resigned.

The Battle of Fredericksburgh and the Cabinet Crisis.

From the London Times.

Though the accounts of the battle of Fredericksburgh are still imperfect and differ considerably as to the real amount of the Federal losses, the effect of the disaster is evident in the popular agitation by which it has been followed. The almost invincible belief that the arms and cause of the Union could not meet with any serious defeat has been rudely shaken. Former reverses were considered merely temporary checks, soon to be recovered; but repeated and persistent misfortune will try the strongest faith, and there is a point at which the contemplation of efforts made in vain reduces the stoutest self-opinion to despair. That point the American public appear to have reached in the crushing overthrow of the ill-starred Grand Army of the Potomac in its last encounter with the enemy. This disaster the people do not regard with the singular indifference with which they received the intelligence of former defeats, probably because it diminishes that fund of hope for the future from which the community has hitherto drawn consolation. If the depression after the first shock of the blow could be diverted into confidence in the Government, and belief in the military commanders, a few soothing assurances that the state of things is rather improved than injured by the mischance would have their old effect. But this is not the case. The depression now is deeper, and promises to be more than momentary, as it has taken the more dangerous form of discontent. The Government is compelled to pay unwonted deference to the rising wrath of the community. The wasted efforts of the troops in the field and their terrible losses have been promptly acknowledged. The official report of the Commander has been published, and he has assumed all the responsibility of the battle, as if to avert the gathering storm from the heads of his political chiefs. After the former reverses no official acknowledgment of the services of the army was made, nor were the Generals' reports permitted to appear, except in fragments. It was remarked that even the President's Message contained no allusion to the exertions of the officers and men, though after the campaigns of the Summer and Autumn a recognition of what they had endured might have been made from policy, if not good feeling. Continued adversity, or something arising out of it, has quickened the President's perceptions. Within a few days of the defeat at Fredericksburgh he has acknowledged the bravery of the army, and published Gen. BURNSIDE'S report of the causes that rendered the courage of the troops unavailing. The promptitude with which this information has been given indicates the pressure by which it has been forced from the Cabinet at Washington. What was fairly due to the public has been obtained only in the midst of a political "crisis," which has shaken the Administration, but for the present has not overthrown it. Had the "crisis" ended in the retirement of Mr. LINCOLN'S Ministry, it would have been much more than the change of men, of which here we think so little. It would have been equivalent to a political revolution.

It might have been thought natural that the first expression of popular feeling against the Administration would have come from the House of Representatives, which is the direct creation of popular suffrage. But that body has remained silent. The blow was struck by the Senate, the least numerous but the most independent and most respected branch of the Legislature. And the movement derived more significance from the fact that it originated with the Republican Senators, or the official party. Mr. SEWARD could not say "some enemy has done this." The denunciation came from political friends and allies. In a secret "caucus" of Senators, twenty-four in number—the whole body, when all the States were represented there, was only sixty—it was resolved to demand of the President a "reconstruction" of his Cabinet. The demand virtually included all the Ministers, but there was a victim more prominent than the others. Mr. SEWARD was specially pointed out as the Jonah to be thrown overboard in the storm. He has become too moderate in his opinions for the extreme fanatics of Abolitionism, though his moderation is rather due to the want of power to enforce their policy than reluctance to adopt it. To his influence they trace the "tardy and ineffective prosecution of the war." The denunciation is precisely the same as those launched against the Girondins by the Mountain in the old French Convention. Disasters in the field have divided the Republican Party, and the zealots impute the reverses, not to the want of Generals able to win victories, but lack of faith in a principle. What but lukewarmness could have failed, with such a cause, and such "boundless resources" to back it? This is the first direct assault, and this time the Cabinet has been saved by the President. He appears to have met the deputation from the Senate with one of his characteristic displays of shrewd common sense, not without a touch of humor. He, too, despairs, but feels that hope is only to be found in a change of the course of events, not a change of men. He said truly enough, "What the country wants is a military success," and he "does not see how a change of Ministry can produce it." And there is an odd, but forcible incongruity in the phrase with which he explained his conviction: "If he had a Cabinet of angels, they could not give the Government a victory." The hopelessness of all human means of success cannot be more strongly described.

The proceedings in the Senate had not been so secret but that the adverse result was known to Mr. SEWARD a few minutes after the denunciatory resolution had been passed. When the interview between the deputation and the President took place, Mr. SEWARD and his inculpated colleagues had resigned their offices. At a second interview, on the following day, the President questioned the members of the deputation more closely. When examined individually, they appeared less determined in their opposition than they had been collectively. When directly asked "whether they thought more harm or good would result from Mr. SEWARD'S resignation," they either declined any discussion of such a personal matter, or refused to give a positive opinion on it. Having thus resolved the mass of opposition into its separate elements, and finding such weakness and distrust as to the consequences of acting on it, the President refused to accept the resignation of his Ministers. They are still in office; they have bent their heads to the tempest for a moment, and its first rush has passed over them. But the demands made by the Senate is so unprecedented that it will fix another unenviable mark on the Republican Administration, already so unhappily distinguished by calamity. The attempt to "reconstruct" the Cabinet, though it has failed, undoubtedly expressed the wish of the majority of the people for a change. But it cannot be effected without an open usurpation of power. The Democratic Government is not a tenant at will. It holds office on a lease, and within its legal term cannot be served with an ejectment. The Americans are paying a heavy price for the inflexibility of their political system. The worst Government cannot be got rid of when it is doing mischief, and the best Administration must be dissolved on the appointed day. At the present moment the whole community is disheartened and angry. But it must endure helplessly. Everybody seems to be compelled to act or suffer against their conviction. The Ministry holds office, though condemned by the Senate; BURNSIDE is a General malgré lui, having accepted the command unwillingly, and confesses he fought the last disastrous battle contrary to the orders of the Government; the existing House of Representatives does not embody the present opinion of the majority of electors; and the President has to carry on a war in which he avows he has abandoned all hope of success. It would, indeed, require his ideal "Cabinet of Angels" to evoke peace and order from these confusions.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

A Vote Not Reached on the House Finance Bill.

Heavy Receipts from Internal Revenue.

$150,000,000 Expected in the Next Fiscal Year.

Investigation of the New-Orleans Election Cases.

Nominations and Promotions Sent to the Senate.

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Jan. 20.

FINANCES.

The House, to-day, was not able to reach a vote on the Finance bill, owing to the large latitude given to debate. The amendments submitted by the Committee of Ways and Means seem to prove generally acceptable.

THE ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate Finance Committee have reported the Army Appropriation bill. They have added a large number of appropriations, amounting in all to several millions of dollars, including one item of three millions for surgical instruments.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The special Message of the President on Finance, in the hands of the Ways and Means Committee, will receive no present action.

MILITARY JUSTICE.

Senator WILSON introduced a bill this morning, prepared by Mr. WHITING, Solicitor of the War Department, and Judge HOLT, at the instance of the Secretary of War, for the prompt and uniform administration of military justice, and the better government of the military forces of the United States. It provides for a Bureau of Military Justice, and the appointment of a Judge-Advocate-General, with the rank and pay of a Brigadier-General, and an Assistant Judge-Advocate-General, with the rank and pay of a Colonel of cavalry, who are to constitute such Bureau, and to have the [illegible] Judge-Advocate-General of each military Department and for each army corps in the field, who are to conduct Courts of Inquiry, General Courts-Martial, and Military Commissions in the several Departments or armies. It is elaborately prepared and is intended to meet the present exigencies of the service.

THE TELEGRAPH TO NEW-ORLEANS.

The House Committee on Military Affairs, at their meeting to-day, authorized their Chairman, Mr. OLIN, to report a bill in accordance with the proposition of CYRUS W. FIELD, for laying a telegraph line from Washington to New-Orleans, coastwise, touching at such points as the Government might designate.

PAYMASTERS.

Mr. MCPHERSON was also authorized to report a bill, in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of War, to give authority to select a Paymaster-General, with the rank and pay of a Brigadier-General, from the regular or volunteer service; and also to report adversely upon the bill before them to increase the pay of Paymasters' Clerks.

NOMINATIONS AND PROMOTIONS.

The list of nominations and promotions sent to the Senate yesterday by the President, is printed, and makes a large pamphlet. Nearly everybody is in it who has had any expectations, making in all about fifteen hundred names.

IRON-CLAD MEN-OF-WAR.

The House Naval Committee, at their meeting to-day, had under consideration the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, to build three large class iron-clad men-of-war, to cost not exceeding twelve millions dollars, for which amount an appropriation will be inserted in the naval appropriation bill.

THE NEW-ORLEANS ELECTIONS.

Mr. BOULIGNY, in the New-Orleans election cases to-day, stated before the House Committee on Elections, that he was notified by Gen. BUTLER, after he had declared himself a candidate for Congress, not to run against Mr. FLANDERS, as he wanted FLANDERS elected. Mr. BOULIGNY states that military law was rigidly exercised in that District. In regard to the other District, he did not know whether it was enforced at all.

KENTUCKY AND THE GOVERNMENT.

Advices from Kentucky lead to the belief that the Legislature will not offer any serious opposition to the policy of the Government, as it has been given out that they designed doing.

THE REPUBLICAN CAUCUS.

The Republican caucus met again this evening, according to adjournment, but we have not learned the particulars of the meeting.

THE M'DOWELL CASE.

In the McDowell Court of Inquiry, to-day, Gen. Barre, Chief of Artillery in the Army of the Potomac on the Peninsula, was called by the Court. The object of his being called was to show the amount of artillery force left by Gen. McClellan for the defence of Washington. Gen. Barre having been relieved from the command of the fortifications around Washington to enable him to accompany the army to the Peninsula, he could not state the force that was left in them. He intimated that his successor, Gen. Doubleday, was the proper person to impart information on this subject. From his testimony, however, it appeared that seven field batteries, embracing thirty-two guns, only partly equipped and drilled, had been left in camp a half a mile east of the Capitol, as a part of the force left for the defence of Washington. About one hundred horses were taken from these batteries just before the departure of the Peninsular expedition, to supply a deficiency in that respect that existed in the artillery that had to be fitted out for Gen. CASEY'S Division at the last hour, there being no other trained horses available for that purpose.

Maj. Gen. F. J. Porter was called by the Court—He stated on examination that, on the 29th of August, he received from Gen. Pope a joint order addressed to Gen. McDowell and himself; that by virtue of this order, Gen. McDowell became his superior in command according to the articles of war, their forces being by the joint order united. At the time of the receipt of this joint order, he stated he was advancing upon Gainesville, according to a previous order on the same day from Gen. Pope. When Gen. McDowell came to him with his copy of the joint order, witness was forming in line of battle on the road to Gainesville. Gen. McDowell remarked to him that that was no place to fight a battle; that he was too far out. This, witness construed into an order at least not to advance any further in that direction, and failing to get explicit orders what to do from Gen. McDowell, [illegible] Gen. McDowell was not acting according to the contemplation of the joint order—which he held was to march upon Gainesville at once—he (Porter) resolved to ignore the authority of Gen. McDowell, and act as if he had not seen the joint order, but according to the previous order he had received from Gen. Pope. Gen. McDowell, however, having taken King's Division away from him to the right, witness was unable to advance any further toward Gainesville, and had to remain where he was. Witness, on cross-examination by Gen. McDowell, claimed not to have actually disobeyed the implied order of Gen. McDowell, although he had just expressed the disposition to do so, for the reason that Gen. McDowell, by taking King's Division from him, had compelled him to remain where he was, as was subsequently also explicitly ordered by Gen. McDowell.

Without concluding the cross-examination of Gen. Porter, the Court adjourned until to-morrow.

EMANCIPATION IN MARYLAND.

The bill of Mr. BINGHAM, of Ohio, introduced in the House, yesterday, to aid the State of Maryland in abolishing Slavery, in most of its provisions is similar to the Missouri emancipation bill, as it passed the House, except that it provides that Maryland shall emancipate all her slaves within two years from the passage of this act, and forever prohibit Slavery in said State. For this purpose, the sum of ten millions of dollars is appropriated by the bill, which was referred to the Select Committee on Emancipation and ordered to be printed.

A PRIZE CAPTURED.

The gunboat Leslie, which arrived at the Navy-yard on Monday, from the Lower Potomac, brought up with her the schooner Hampton, of Deal's Island, which was captured, together with her crew of nine persons, by the gunboat Currituck, near the mouth of the Potomac. The vessel was laden with a valuable cargo of dry goods and groceries, and was endeavoring to run the blockade. The crew were sent to the Old Capitol Prison.

CAVALRY REVIEW.

The Cavalry Brigade attached to Gen. COOPER'S Division, Acting Brig.-Gen. COPELAND Commanding, was reviewed yesterday by Gen. CASEY and Staff. The Brigade, which is composed mostly of new troops, went through the various evolutions of drill with remarkable precision.

IN HOSPITAL.

The number of sick and wounded in the hospitals in Washington, Georgetown and Alexandria, on Jan. 16, was 9,959—a less number than for over a year past. There are 4,581 vacant beds in the hospitals. One hundred and eighty-six medical officers are on duty in the hospitals in this vicinity.

RECOGNIZED.

The President has recognized EDWARDO F. DAVISON, Esq., as Consul of the Argentine Republic at the City of New-York.

CONFIRMATIONS.

The Senate has confirmed the following nominations: Walter Graham, of New-Jersey, to be Consul of the United States at Cape Town, in place of Thomas McDowell, recalled; Cephas Brainard, of New-York, to be Arbitrator on the part of the United States, in the City of New-York, under the treaty with Great Britain of the 7th of April last, for the suppression of the Slave-trade; William L. Avery, of New-Hampshire, do. at Cape Town; Timothy R. Hibbard, of New-York, do. at Sierra Leone; Joseph Smith, George W. Storer, Francis H. Gregory and Silas H. Stringham, to be Rear-Admirals in the navy; Henry M. Canfield, to be Consul at Athens; E. C. Banfield, do. at Algiers; William Breck, do. at Hong Kong; Charles A. Washburn, Minister Resident at Paraguay; Samuel Porter, Surveyor of Customs for Port Beverly, Mass.; George W. McClure, to be Coiner of the Branch Mint of the United States at Denver City; Oscar D. Munson, to be Assayer of the Branch Mint at Denver City.

BUREAU OF EMANCIPATION.

The following is a synopsis of the bill of Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts, (introduced yesterday,) to establish a Bureau of Emancipation:

The bill provides that an office be created in the War Department, to be called the Bureau of Emancipation, and the President to appoint a Commissioner, at a salary of $4,000, to whom shall be referred the adjustment and determination, under the direction of the Secretary of War, of all questions arising under this act, or under any laws existing, or which shall be passed in future, touching the general superintendence, disposition and direction of all persons of African descent who are or shall become free, by virtue of any proclamation, law or military order, issued, enacted or promulgated during the present rebellion, or by virtue of any act of Emancipation which shall be enacted by any State. The Commissioner to have authority, under direction of the Secretary of War, to appoint —— clerks, &c.

It shall be the duty of military and civil officers of the United States to make returns of all their proceedings under any law or order, by virtue of which persons held as slaves shall have become free, &c., to the Commissioner, and he shall, under direction of the Secretary of War, be charged with the execution of all laws providing for the colonization of such freedmen, and also with the delivery of any bonds of the United States to States which shall become entitled thereto by reason of the emancipation of slaves, &c.

Section four provides that the Commissioner, under direction of Secretary of War, establish suitable and proper regulations, and cause them to be enforced, for the economical and judicious treatment and disposition of these freedmen, to the end that said freedmen and the Government shall be mutually protected, and their rights and interests duly determined and maintained. Commissioner to make annual report to Secretary of War, to be sent to Congress, &c.

RESTORED.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, WASHINGTON, Jan. 15, 1863.

SPECIAL ORDERS No. 23.—Extract No. 11.—So much of Special Orders No. 350, series of 1862, from this office as drops from the rolls of the army Assistant-Surgeon J. A. ARMSTRONG, Seventy-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, is hereby revoked, and he is hereby restored to his command, provided the vacancy has not been filled.

By order of the Secretary of War.

L. THOMAS, Adjutant-General.

TO THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Jan. 20.

THE INTERNAL REVENUE.

Commissioner of Internal Revenue BOUTWELL has submitted his first statement concerning the transactions of that Bureau, from which it appears the entire number of persons employed in assessing and collecting the revenue is 3,882. He has not the means at the present time of estimating with confidence the amount of revenue which will be derived under the Excise law of July, 1861. During the last month he has caused careful investigation to be instituted into the several sources of revenue, and an estimate to be made of the amount which may be derived from each. According to this, he received from all sources, excepting stamp duties, during the current fiscal year ending with June next, the sum of $61,777,799. He estimates that the receipts from stamp duties during the same period will amount to $15,000,000, making an aggregate sum of $76,777,799. It may be asserted that, without material change in the business of the country, the revenue from the same sources for the fiscal year 1863 and '64 will not be less than $150,000,000. The estimates of receipts and expenditures show the cost of assessing and collecting the taxes under the present system will be 2 41-100 per centum. The Commissioner has a stringent confidence that in the States now acknowledging the authority of the Constitution the expense can never exceed 3 per centum. He makes many important suggestions, including modifications of the law, and the appointment of a solicitor or legal adviser.

CONTRABAND TRADE.

The Navy Department has received dispatches from Commodore HARWOOD, commanding the Potomac flotilla, dated 19th, stating that the Leslie arrived at Hampton Roads, Sunday, with the schooner Hampton, of Baltimore, in tow, which was captured by the Currituck on the morning of the 13th, in Dividing Creek. The Commodore states that the vessel cleared light ostensibly for the oyster trade, but took in her cargo at Baltimore. She had on board several passengers, who, from letters found on board, appeared to be persons who had been in the habit of passing to and from Virginia. At the time of the capture of the Hampton, a canoe at the same place escaped, but was afterwards taken at Indian Creek, not however, until her crew had escaped to the woods, and the principal part of her cargo, it is supposed, had been thrown overboard. Commodore HARWOOD also reports that before these occurrences, the Currituck broke up, for the present, an establishment for supplying salt to Richmond, by destroying the kettles used in its manufacture.

It appears from the report of Acting-Master LUNNEKIN, commanding the Currituck, that when he arrived at Dividing Creek, he was informed by a negro that at Southwest Branch there was a large manufactory of salt and a steam mill, owned by a man named OSCAR SEALEY, who had been extensively engaged in supplying the rebels with salt. The Commander of the Currituck proceeded thither, sent a party on shore and destroyed all the kettles, &c., with the exception of the boiler, and left word to the proprietor to discontinue the occupation, under penalty of the complete destruction of the mill and a large amount of lumber contiguous. Dividing Creek is one of the points to which General N. SAUNDERS advised his correspondents to make shipment.

A BUREAU OF STATISTICS.

The Secretary of the Interior sent to the House to-day a recommendation for the establishment of a Bureau of Statistics in his Department, with a draft of a bill, the design of what the Bureau shall be. The Bureau is to acquire and diffuse among the people of the United States authentic and useful information on our internal and foreign commerce; on the channels of trade; on our industry, produce, property, mineral and other resources; on our educational, literary, moneyed, charitable, religious and penal institutions; on our expenditures, revenues and taxation, and on the mortality, pauperism, insanity and crime in the United States and that of foreign countries. The office of Commissioner of Statistics, with a salary equal to that of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and that of Chief Clerk are created, and the office of Superintendent of the Census is abolished. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to detail clerks for the duties appertaining to the Bureau.

EXCLUSION OF MATTER FROM THE MAILS.

The Senate to-day received a communication from the Postmaster-General, giving an answer to the inquiries growing out of the Wheeling and other cases of exclusion of printed matter from the mails by military authority, after the rescinding by the Postmaster-General of his orders on the subject. He says it was a military order, with which he could no more interfere than any other citizen. It was asked by what law Mr. BLAIR acted? Mr. BLAIR replied: "The law of public safety." He adds: "It may be proper for the better understanding of the subject, to state that several applications were made to me during the past year to exclude certain newspapers from the mails in Western Virginia, which were refused. Thereupon, the commanding officer in that department ordered the circulation of these papers to be suppressed. It was not in the power of the Postmaster-General, more than that of any other citizen, to disobey the order; and although he applied for and obtained my instructions then and subsequently to obey the order, it was the military order and military power to enforce it, not my instructions, which relieved him from the responsibility of delivering the mail matter in question."

AFFAIRS IN EUROPE.

The French Government and the Roman Question—The Influence of the Empress in French Politics—A Difficulty in Denmark—Austria and Prussia, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Tuesday, Dec. 30, 1862.

It was lately stated by the Opinione, of Turin, that when M. DE SARTIGUES, the new French Ambassador, broached the subject of Rome with M. FARINI, the Italian Prime Minister replied smilingly: "Don't you think, Monsieur l'Ambassadeur, it is useless to talk on a matter on which we are sure not to agree?" Three or four days ago, the Coustitutionnel was ordered by the French Ministry to say that there was no truth in the report of this conversation. The Opinione, however, has since stoutly maintained the correctness of its version, and I am now able to tell you, upon the very best authority, that it is strictly true, if not in the letter, at least in substance. I know that the present Italian Ministers have resolved, in case M. DROUYN DE L'HUYS should send them any more dispatches urging further negotiation with the Pope, to confine their answer to a simple acknowledgment of the receipt, avoiding anything like argument or altercation. The dignified position assumed by the Italian Ministry, and which I most sincerely hope it will be able to maintain, is one of no ordinary difficulty. It has been remarked that the usual circular, informing diplomatic agents abroad of the general nature and direction of the foreign policy of a new Ministry, has not yet been dispatched from Turin. The reason is, that M. PASOLINI's draft is still under the consideration of the Cabinet, and they think it advisable to wait yet awhile before sending it off. The two principal grounds for the adjournment are the questions of Rome and Greece. As to the first of these, the Cabinet will certainly not pronounce in favor of the status quo, because such a course would have a deplorable effect in Italy, and is not to be thought of. But, on the other hand, it is very difficult officially to assert that claim to have Rome for her capital, which Italy will not abandon, without affording an excuse for those diplomatic notes from France which the Ministers wish particularly to have nothing to do with. As to Greece, the turn which affairs may take from one day to another is so uncertain, that the Italian Government naturally wishes to gain as much time as possible before committing itself to any opinion in a crisis in which its own interests, especially in the Mediterranean are very directly affected.

While on the subject of Italy, I may state that, although the Farini Ministry is cool toward France, on account of the manifest hostility of M. DROUYN DE L'HUYS to Italian interests and aspirations, yet it carefully avoids any such marked advances toward England as might wound the susceptibility of the French nation. I mention this, because some of the London papers contain exaggerated statements about the leaning of Italy toward the English alliance.

This boat will bring you papers containing a great deal of talk about "reforms in Rome." I cannot write the phrase without laughing. The Empress' journal, La France, gives out that these reforms are very serious and important, and will be mentioned by the Emperor in his forthcoming speech at the opening of the session, in Jan. 12. That I dare say they will be. Such as they are, they were conceived for that purpose, and no other. But you may be very sure that they amount to nothing. Reform in Rome is a worn-out theatrical trick, a stale stage tumble, to cheat simpletons. The famous reforms of Gaeta were made under the pressure of French diplomacy, and, as all the world knows, were never carried out. Now there is nothing more promised than some juggle about an elective Financial Council. But the Council, if ever it meets, will have only a consultative, not an operative voice; and, inasmuch as the Pope chooses the electors, the whole thing is a farce not worth speaking of.

I hear that the influence of the Empress is more and more dominant every day in the Emperor's councils. M. DE PERSIGNY, whose appointment was a trap for the Liberal party, is now a mere nullity. He showed a total want of sense of personal dignity and true patriotism, when he withdrew the resignation which he tendered on the reactionary appointment of M. DROUYN DE L'HUYS being made.

The interesting domestic question of the hour is who is to be the new Archbishop of Paris? Some people about the Court think the Empress will be strong enough to get a thoroughgoing Ultramontanist named. But my own impression is that the Emperor is too cunning to go so roundly to work. Some trimmer, with no real principles, who will do as he is ordered from time to time, and provoke as little criticism as possible, is the man wanted for the place.

There is important news from Copenhagen. The Danish Government which, as you are aware, indignantly rejected Lord RUSSELL's proposal for a settlement of the long-standing differences with the Duchies, as being too favorable to the German party, has been startled by a diplomatic note from Russia, which in stronger language than Lord RUSSELL used, urges the acceptance of his scheme as the only thing practicable. This decided intervention on the part of the head of the house of Holstein, is a surprise to Europe as well as to Denmark, for hitherto Lord RUSSELL's dispatch had been considered a failure, and it was censured even in England as an ill-advised and meddlesome act. Now, however, the better opinion is that Denmark will not find sufficient support in Europe to resist the pressure put upon her. In other words, France, whose sympathies are with Denmark, will not make a casus belli of the Schleswig-Holstein question with the other four great Powers. The probability therefore is that Denmark must yield, but in that case a change of Ministers is inevitable, and a new Ministry will have an up-hill task, because the leading feature of its policy will be unpopular in the country.

The diplomatic relations between Austria and Prussia, are at this moment so bad, that some politicians seriously think a rupture of the Federal Union of Germany not improbable. To this extreme measure, M. DE BISMARK SCHŒNHAUSEN, the Prime Minister of the rash and narrow-minded King, is said to look, as the means of preparing the domination of Prussia in a new and less extensive union. Unfortunately for their schemes, Germany is now, and with but too much cause, ill-disposed toward Prussia. The ideal of the Germanic nation, which tends indeed toward unity, but unity with liberty and radical reforms, can scarcely be made to harmonize with the resuscitation of divine right and feudalism, which is the prominent topic in King WILLIAM's garrulous speeches. Although the last files of German newspapers are full of speculations on this matter, I refuse to believe that M. DE BISMARK can think the time propitious for the realization of his recent prophecy—"an united Germany made one by fire and sword."

I believe I have observed before on the ineptitude of the French nation to do anything great by voluntary public subscription. At all events there is a striking instance of this ineptitude now. For the last month the Press has teemed with eloquent articles in support of a national subscription for the distressed cotton manufacturers in Rouen and other northern towns. Most ingenious suggestions have been made, many beautiful sentiments uttered, with the view of stimulating public charity. The Emperor subscribed 10,000 francs, and every Court minion, and almost every functionary, has been morally compelled to give something. Well, the result of all these extraordinary efforts is that the amount subscribed by all France—I take the figures from the Temps of this evening—is 200,410 francs and 70 centimes. All France, in a month, furnishes less money for its hundreds of thousands distressed fellow-citizens than the City of New-York alone subscribed in two hours, not for its own people, but for the workmen of Lancashire! France may well be ashamed of the comparison. I would be sorry, however, to say that this miserable result is to be attributed to heartlessness on the part of the French people. They are far from being insensible to the claims of charity in cases which force themselves upon their immediate and personal attention. Immense sums may be collected from them, as the Pope knows, to his great benefit, by incessant solicitation for a few sous at a time. Everybody who goes to mass drops something into the priest's bag, and does not know, or indeed care what becomes of his offering. But the French, as a people, are not self-reliant, and are devoid of public spirit. They look to that abstract thing called "Government" to conduct public affairs, and moneyed people have no notion of deranging their private budgets by voluntary contributions of any thing beyond small change.

CENTRAL AMERICA.

Earthquake in Salvador and Guatemala—The Dispute Between these two Countries.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PANAMA, Friday, Jan. 9, 1863.

The Panama Railroad Company's steamship Salvador, Capt. RATHBUN, from Central American ports arrived at Panama on the 4th inst. Her dates from Guatemala and Salvador are to the 25th and 27th of December; from Nicaragua to the 30th same month, and from Costa Rica to Jan. 2.

The Salvador brought 871 seroons indigo, 289 seroons cochineal, 256 sacks coffee, with cacao, hides, deer skins, &c.

The only items of particular interest are the earthquakes in Salvador and Guatemala, and the death of President CASTELLANOS, of Honduras. Vice-President CASTELLANOS, who has been acting President since the assassination of the President, in February last, died at Comayagua, the Capital, on the 11th ult. Señor FRANCISCO MONTES fills his place temporarily.

The dispute between Guatemala and Salvador is carried on with great acrimony on both sides, and bids fair to embroil the two States in war. In a pamphlet, published on the 19th of last month, President BARRIOS, of Salvador, over his own signature, says, in conclusion, after recounting all the inimical acts of Guatemala: "Another war will not be like former ones. Either Guatemala or Salvador will disappear!"

At about 8 o'clock on the night of the 19th of December, severe shocks of earthquake were felt throughout a great part of Guatemala. The towns of Esquintla and Amatatlan were nearly destroyed. The old as well as the new capital also suffered severely.

At the same hour severe shocks were felt in many parts of Salvador. The shock lasted nearly two minutes. Many church edifices and other buildings suffered. In Santa Tecla, Izalco, Sonsonnate and other places, especially in Ahuachapan and Metapan, there was much damage to temples and houses, but no lives were lost.

From Nicaragua we learn that the transit line is now in readiness or nearly ready for the transportation of California passengers. A schooner with wagons and harness has arrived out at Greytown from New-York. Political matters are not yet easy, and the fate of the country depends much upon the course events may take between Guatemala and Salvador.

In Costa Rica the Presidential election interests a few of the principal inhabitants only. Dr. JESUS JIMENES is set down as the most likely to be elected.

The new crop of coffee was held so high (15 cents,) that but few buyers would venture to invest.

SAN SALVADOR.

Visit of an Earthquake—Its Effect—Sugar Culture, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

SAN SALVADOR, CENTRAL AMERICA, Monday, Dec. 22, 1862.

The State of Salvador was visited, on the evening of the 16th of December, by the most severe shock of earthquake it has experienced since that which occurred in 1854, and leveled its Capital city to the earth. The writer, on the day of its appearance, was in San Salvador, in company with a party of gentlemen, when he called the attention of those present to a decided but slight shock, which all experienced, but which excited nothing further than a passing remark. In the evening he returned to Saint Tecla, about twelve miles distant, where he had scarcely risen from the dinner-table before the house he was in began to tremble. To those present, it excited no alarm, until its walls began to vibrate to and fro with a rapid motion that threatened entire demolition to the edifice. This was the signal for escape, and all fled incontinently to the open court, amid the dust and din of its crumbling walls. This was one of the few buildings whose walls were entirely demolished. The roof and beams were left standing, and no damage to life or limb occurred beyond the shock of the nervous system, which none were too stout to be indifferent to.

In Saint Tecla, but few houses failed to exhibit some evidences to the passage of the unwelcome visitor, but no lives were lost, and but a comparatively small amount of absolute damage was done to each. The greater part of the population considered it the part of prudence to remain in their open courts for great part of the night. Fears of this kind, however, are evanescent, and to-day but little is thought of the affair.

In San Salvador the shock was nearly as great, but with the exception of the demolition of three or four houses, the damage was slight. It is thought, though with what reason I am unable to say, that the prevalence of high winds which now blow from the North, is in some way or other connected with these earthquake phenomena.

The valley affected by this shock is one of the most beautiful as well as one of the most productive I have ever seen; and under the auspices of a liberal and enlightened Government, which has extended every facility possible to agricultural pursuits, is cultivated in the most careful manner. Its chief product is coffee, of which there are between one and two million of trees; but it is at the same time admirably adapted to the culture of sugar, of which there are considerable estates. Before visiting this region I was of the opinion that it required the high temperature of Cuba or Louisiana to bring the cane to perfection; but I have here seen it flourishing with a vigor fully equal to either of these countries, under a temperature never exceeding 82° Farenheit. The seasons are divided into dry and wet. The latter is the one in which the cane attains its perfection; and the former the one in which its juice is expressed. So arid is this season that the watery particles that require so much labor and expensive evaporations in many sugar-producing countries, are largely absorbed by the dry atmosphere of this climate. The consequence is that a very fair article of sugar can be produced at 2½ cents per pound.

The States of California and Oregon, even now, draw a considerable portion of their supply of unrefined sugar from this State, and in the future this source of supply of coffee and sugar, as well as rice, cannot well be over-estimated in calculating the elements of value in the development of the Pacific possessions of the United States.

Nor is it at all impossible that in these articles this State may, if left in quiet to pursue its agricultural pursuits, become largely the supplier of the United States, and a corresponding purchaser of those manufactured goods which are the product of the Northern mechanics, but are now supplied by different European States.

Unfortunately, however, the political horizon is anything but clear. The rapid accumulation of means dependant on a reasonably well arranged system of labor, has excited the envy of some of her sister States, while the tendency of the Government to the free and liberal institutions which its present able head, Gen BARRIOS, is fully imbued with, have caused alarm in others, who still cling with great tenacity to ancient forms and a strict rule in the affairs of State.

This is the real, although not the avowed course that now induces Guatemala to press demands upon Salvador which cannot be acceded to, without a loss of national honor. Official relations between the two States are suspended, and were it not that Salvador is in a better state of defence than Guatemala, war would be inevitable. As it is, this event may yet happen, but when or how it is not possible to determine, as the whole buiden of such an event rests with CARRERA, and the monarchical party which exercises so great an influence over him. It is clearly the policy of the more liberal Governments of the United States, and of the commercial nations of Europe, to see that peace is preserved wherever practical, and in the case of Salvador and Guatemala, not to allow, without good and sufficient reason, either to disturb the harmony of the other. The great tribunal of public opinion, which has operated so largely in influencing the affairs of state in Europe in later years, cannot be without its influence in the affairs of Central America, whose importance, in a commercial point of view, is daily becoming more obvious.

SOUTH AMERICA.

News from Peru, Chili, and the Argentine Confederation.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PANAMA, Friday, Jan. 9, 1863.

The British steamship Callao, from Valparaiso and intermediate ports, arrived at Panama on the 5th inst. She brings dates from Valparaiso and Santiago de Chile to Dec. 18, and from Callao and Lima to Dec. 28. The Callao brought about $338,000 for Europe, 1,250 bales cotton, (150 pounds to the bale,) 702 bales wool, 177 ceroons bark, and 37 packages merchandise for Liverpool and Southampton; 61 ceroons bark, and 30 bales goat-skins for New-York; five ceroons Paranagua tea for San Francisco; bricks, &c., for Panama.

The news is not important. There is nothing late from Ecuador. On the middle December, President MORENO returned to Guayaquil. He had a bad fall in crossing the Andes.

PERU.

The Government of Peru has paid the claim of the British Government for damage to the bark Julia, by an accidental shot from a Peruvian war ship, which revolted in January, 1862, and which was endeavoring to hit a ship of the Peruvian squadron.

The impeachment of CASTILLA's late Ministers, Don M. MORALES and Gen. NICOLAS FREYRE, for violation of the Constitution, has been dropped.

Ex-President VIVANCO has returned to Lima from his exile.

The death of a distinguished prelate, the Bishop of Chochapoyas, Don PEDRO RUIS, is announced.

The shipments of guano for November amounted to 43,020 tons, all to Europe, in 45 vessels, 15 of which were American.

Exchange on London, 60 and 90 days, 41 to 42 pence per dollar.

There is nothing new from Bolivia.

CHILI.

Congress has adjourned. Señor LASTARIA, Secretary of the Treasury, has given place to Señor DOMINGO SANTAMARIA, a Liberal, which gives much satisfaction. The Government is authorized to issue two years' bonds for $1,000,000. Congress has also sanctioned the project extending the Southern Railroad from San Fernando to Chilian, and thence to Concepcion and Talcahuano.

A submarine telegraph, between Chili and Europe, is proposed. It is favored by the London Engineering Society—the wire to start from Spain, pass through Brazil, Uruguay, Paraguay and the Argentine Republic, as far as Mendoza. The undertakers say they have already closed their contracts with these Governments, and promise to bring the line to Chili if the Government will pay a subsidy of $10,000 (per year?)

The Chilian troops, which have entered the territory of Arauco, are likely to meet with a good deal of trouble before they subdue the Indians.

The dispute with Bolivia about the guano deposits in Mejillones is likely to be amicably settled. The force lately sent there by Chili in the war steamer Maipu had been amicably received.

In Santiago the Americans were raising money for the succor of wounded Union soldiers in the United States.

Two American whalers had arrived at Talcahuano, the masters of which report bad luck, and predict bad luck generally to whaling craft. From March to November no oil worth naming had been barreled by these two ships.

The papers are still crying aloud for theatrical or opera companies to come to Chili.

The business in silver and copper mining is improving. Business is very dull in Valparaiso, there being no purchasers from the interior. The next month, however, it was expected that merchants from the north and south of the Republic and from the Argentine Republic, would flock to Valparaiso, as usual, to make purchases. The wheat harvest will be good, and the business in cattle, hides and wool is expected to be an improvement on last year. Money is plenty, but the best kind of security is demanded. During the fortnight, among other arrivals, were the Chilian brig Triton, from California, with 60,000 feet red pine; two ships from France, with general cargo, and four from England, with coal, brick, and assorted cargo. Rice—There was no Carolina in first hands, and India and Peru is scarce. California red pine lumber sold for $37 50 per 1,000 feet, on board. Flour was dull; prices $3 68 to $4 25, six months. The barley yield will be small; price, at present, $2 06 per fanega, cash. Copper bars $17 12, cash. Cotton and woolen goods have not changed in price during the fortnight. Exchange on London, 60 and 90 days, 44½ to 45 pence per dollar; on France, 4f. 70c. to 4f. 75c. Freights—To England and Hamburg, £2 17s. 6d.; to the United States, $13 per English ton.

ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

The country is quiet in all its parts. The President has formed his Cabinet, consisting of Don JOSEPH BERGES, Minister of Foreign Affairs; Don FRANCIS SANCHES, Ministro de Gobierno; Don MARIANO GONZALES, Treasury; Col. VENANCIO LOPEZ, War and Navy.

A strange phenomenon had happened in one of the Argentine Provinces. The Comercio del Paraná describes it as follows:

"On the 12th inst., about 7 o'clock in the morning, it got so very dark, that in a great many houses in this city, lights were necessary; it soon began very slowly to clear up, but the day remained cloudy till about 2 o'clock P. M., with strong gusts of wind.

"The same night it rained black water! Some tubs that remained out of doors were found next morning filled with a muddy and very dirty water. Notwithstanding the positiveness with which this fact was stated to us, we hesitated to print it, judging it an impossible phenomenon, and supposing it arose from the condition of the tubs. But we are now convinced of the contrary, the fact being spoken of all over the town.

A letter we have at hand, from a reliable person, reads as follows:

'Since the 7th it has been raining, at intervals of half an hour, and it has been noticed that the water is not tasteless.

On the 12th a strange phenomenon happened, which has surprised everybody. Tubs were found to be standing filled with black water, from the rain we had last night. There are persons who assert that it has rained till 8 o'clock this morning, and that the same rain stained the clothes that happened to have been left out of doors to dry.

In view of the above statements, not a doubt remains that on the 12th of September it rained black water.

Let sages explain to us what secrets of nature are these!"

At about 6 o'clock in the morning a total eclipse, that made it necessary to light the street lamps, occurred in Valparaiso.

THE McDOWELL COURT OF INQUIRY.

Testimony of Col. Tilson, Capt. Chandler and Col. Scriver—Interesting Letter from Gen. McClellan—Operations of Aug. 28.

From Our Own Reporter

FORTY-SIXTH DAY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Saturday, Jan. 17, 1863.

After the reading of the journal of the previous day, Gen. McDowell stated that he himself had procured from the War Department the minutes of the Council of Corps Commanders held in this City last Spring, referred to by him in the proceedings of yesterday, which minutes he produced to the Court.

By request of Gen. McDowell, Gen. Heintzelman was sent for to verify these minutes.

Lieut.-Col. Tilson recalled by Gen. McDowell—I was with Gen. King's Division on or near the Warrenton Turnpike at the time it became engaged with the enemy, on the evening of the 28th of August last. The enemy at that time were upon the road leading, as I understand, from Sudley Springs to Haymarket, and approaching on this road from the direction of Sudley Springs. The head of their column was nearly opposite that point on the turnpike at which Gen. Reynolds' Division had been shelled in the morning. The road that the enemy were on approached the turnpike slightly at this point, and is about a mile and a half from Warrenton Turnpike. The artillery and artillery ammunition in King's Division, after the engagement, were in their usual condition, except that one of Capt. Monroe's caissons had been blown up by his own order, in consequence of its stock having been broken, rendering it impracticable to move it. I think that but few horses were killed, and but a small part of the ammunition expended. I was out on a reconnoissance with Gen. McDowell on the 30th of August. I learned while on this reconnoissance, from Gen. Heintzelman, and also I think from Col. Allen, of the Maine Cavalry, where the enemy previously held their position. It was on the Centreville side of Bull Run, to the north of the Warrenton Pike; I should say in the vicinity of five or six miles, but in this I may be incorrect. I cannot state accurately the hour that King's Division commenced to withdraw from in front of the enemy; but think it was about 11 or 12 o'clock.

Questions by the Court.—The division retired by the road leading to Manassas Junction. I think that it was the same or nearly the same route on which the division had marched to the pike on the preceding day, when turned back from the direction of Manassas. We had proceeded about a mile toward Manassas when turned back on the 28th. I think I remained with the artillery until after it had retired, on the night of the engagement, and came away with Gen. King. I know of no difficulty encountered on account of the condition of the roads on the night of the engagement. The roads were good, and we came through the fields mostly. The night was quite dark, and my impression was that it was cloudy.

Questions by Gen. McDowell—I think that King's Division fell back over the turnpike before retiring toward Manassas. I think that the road we then took led by Bethlehem Church. The road that we took would not be the direct route, I suppose, from the battle-field to Manassas Junction.

Questions by the Court—We started to go to Manassas Junction, but whether by the most direct route I do not know certainly. The route we took is the only one of which I have any personal knowledge.

Capt. Chandler called by Gen. McDowell—I was at Falmouth, opposite Fredericksburgh, last Spring and a part of last Summer. A field of forty to sixty acres of wheat, near the Lacey House—to the east of the Lacey House—which had been protected by Gen. McDowell while our troops were there, was harvested by the Post Quartermaster, taken to Fredericksburgh and ground, on account of the United States Government, and the flour distributed to our troops.

During the proceedings to-day the Court called up the following paper, which had been in the possession of the Court several days, but had not yet been read:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, ON BOARD THE COMMODORE, April 1, 1862.

Maj.-Gen. N. P. Banks, Commanding Fifth Corps:

GENERAL: The change in affairs in the Valley of the Shenandoah has rendered necessary a corresponding departure, temporarily at least, from the plan we some days since agreed upon. In my arrangements I assume that you have with you a force amply sufficient to drive Jackson before you, provided he is not reinforced largely. I also assume that you may find it impossible to detach anything toward Manassas for some days, probably not until the operations of the main army have drawn all the rebel force toward Richmond.

You are aware that Gen. Sumner has for some days been at Manassas Junction with two divisions of infantry, six batteries and two regiments of cavalry, and that a reconnoissance to the Rappahannock forced the enemy to destroy the railway bridge at Rappahannock Station, on the Orange and Alexandria Railroad. Since that time our cavalry have found nothing on this side of the Rappahannock in that direction, and it seems clear that we have no reason to fear any return of the rebels in that quarter; their movements near Fredericksburgh also indicate a final abandonment of that neighborhood. I doubt whether Johnson will now reinforce Jackson with a view to offensive operations. The time is probably passed when he could have gained anything by doing so. I have ordered in one of Sumner's Divisions, (that of Richardson, late Sumner's,) to Alexandria for embarkation; Blenker's has been detached from the Army of the Potomac, and ordered to report to Gen. Frement.

Two regiments of cavalry have been ordered out; and are now on the way to relieve the two regiments of Sumner.

Four thousand infantry, and one battery, leave Washington at once for Manassas. Some 3,000 more will move in one or two days, and soon after some 3,000 additional.

I will order Blenker to march on Strasburgh, and to report to you for temporary duty, so that should you find a large force in your front, you can avail yourself of his aid. As soon as possible, please direct him on Winchester, thence to report to the Adjutant-General of the army for orders—but keep him until you are sure what you have in front.

In regard to your own movements, the most important thing at present is to throw Jackson well back and then to assume such a position as to enable you to prevent his return. As soon as the railway communications are reëstablished it will be probably important and advisable to move on Staunton, but this would require secure communications, and a force of from 25,000 to 30,000 for active operations. It should also be nearly coincident with my own move on Richmond; at all events, not so long before it as to enable the rebels to concentrate on you and their return on me. I fear that you cannot be ready in time, although it may come in very well, with a force less than that I have mentioned, after the main battle near Richmond. When Gen. Sumner leaves Warrenton Junction, Gen. Abercrombie will be placed in immediate command of Manassas and Warrenton Junction, under your general orders. Please inform me, frequently, by telegraph, and otherwise, as to the state of things in your front.

I am very truly yours,
(Signed,) GEO. B. McCLELLAN,
Major-General Commanding.

P. S.—From what I have just learned, it would seem that the two regiments of cavalry intended for Warrenton Junction have gone to Harper's Ferry. Of the four additional regiments placed under your orders, two should as promptly as possible move by the shortest route on Warrenton Junction.

I am, Sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
(Signed,) GEO. B. McCLELLAN,
Major-General Commanding.

CITY OF NEW-YORK, Jan. 3, 1863.

FORTY-SEVENTH DAY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Monday, Jan. 19, 1863.

Lieut.-Col. Tilson, recalled by Gen. McDowell—I was with Gen. McDowell on the 29th of August last, on the occasion of his march with King's and Rickett's Divisions, from near Bethlehem Church, up the Sudley Springs Road to the battle field. I was, on that occasion, the bearer of orders to the division officers of Gen. King's Division, to the effect that his Division should form on the left of Gen. Reynolds' Division. I saw measures taken by Gen. McDowell for the execution of these orders.

Questions by the Court—The measures taken by Gen. McDowell for the execution of these orders were: Going to the head of King's Division; directing the Chief of Artillery to send forward his batteries and get them in position as soon as possible; sending orders to the Division Officers to bring up their troops and get them ready for action; going to the front himself and directing the movements of his corps. I should think that it was about 4 or 5 o'clock when these measures were commenced, but that they were continued until after dark. In the fore part of the day, on the 29th, prior to 4 o'clock, about noon, I think—it may have been earlier—Gen. McDowell and Staff left Manassas Junction and went forward to where Gen. King's Division halted in the morning, where he gave the necessary directions as to the order in which the troops should march. He went forward with the troops, and pushed forward the measures for the formation of King's Division, as before stated. When Gen. McDowell did in the morning preceding the time of his coming up to King's Division, I do not know. Why he did not move earlier on that day than he did, as per question, I do not know. I do not know where Gen. Reynolds was during that day, as I was not with him. The reason Gen. McDowell went by the Sudley Springs road rather than by the way King's and Reynolds' Divisions had come was that he might get his troops more readily into action, Gen. Porter being in his front.

A.—I have no knowledge whatever.

Q.—Were the movements of Gen. McDowell on that day made with the rapidity and celerity which the exigencies of the case would seem to demand?

A.—Gen. McDowell was himself very active and energetic in making every effort to get the troops forward. Whether his orders were acted upon as promptly and actively as they should have been by all Division Commanders, I am unable to say, not having been in a position where I could see all of the movements. The movements of the troops from near Manassas until they reached the vicinity of the battle-field, was the ordinary rate of march. I should say the distance was about five or six miles. During the night of the 28th, I think the movement of King's Division commenced between 11 and 12 o'clock, and halted after sunrise next morning—it may have been as late as 8 o'clock—that is, the portion of the column we were with, the middle of the column.

Col. Schriver, Chief of Gen. McDowell's Staff, recalled by Gen. McDowell.—On the 29th of August, Gen. McDowell was active in getting his troops under way to Gainesville, under order of Gen. Pope. I think they moved about 8 or 9 o'clock in the morning. After his troops were got upon the march, Gen. McDowell went forward personally to the head of Gen. Porter's column. When he left Gen. Porter, he went so rapidly back to the head of his own column that I was unable and unwilling to follow him, as I was unacquainted with the route he took. On arriving at the head of our column by the ordinary road, I found Gen. McDowell there, and learned that he had arrived by a near cut across the fields. I think I saw the troops moving on the Sudley Springs Road when I arrived at the head of our column.

Questions by the Court—It was some time in the afternoon that Gen. McDowell turned his column upon the Sudley Springs Road. I cannot tell exactly the hour, having made no note of it. His column had moved, by his order, during the preceding portion of the day, I should think about four or five miles—probably more than that. The distance from Manassas to where we halted was about three miles. I cannot tell what time it was that Gen. McDowell parted with Gen. Pope. It was very early in the morning of the 28th that Gen. McDowell reached the division of Gen. Reynolds, after bivouacking near the troops of Gen. Sigel. I cannot state the precise time, nor the distance from the place of bivouac. It was at Reynolds' headquarters, I think, that Gen. McDowell learned of Gen. King's retreat. I cannot state the precise hour—he may have learned it before I did. He remained with Reynolds' Division; I cannot state how long; we took breakfast there. On arriving at Reynolds' Division, Gen. McDowell did not, to my knowledge, dispatch any Aide-de-Camp to halt King's Division, or to intercept King's Division, and halt it. I do not know how McDowell's Corps came to follow Porter's Corps on the morning of the 29th, unless it was so ordered.

Questions by Gen. McDowell.—I cannot say certainly, but I think that Gen. McDowell, when he took breakfast with Gen. King's Division on the morning of the 29th, had not taken a meal since the 27th. The country between the Warrenton Pike and Bull Run, the Sudley Springs Road and Manassas Railroad, contained many old hutted camps or Winter quarters of the enemy, and cross roads running from one to another.

The Court adjourned.

FROM FORTRESS MONROE.

Exchange of Prisoners—The Steamer Express at City Point—Another Visit to be Made Forthwith.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

FORTRESS MONROE, Saturday, Jan. 17, 1863.

The steamboat Express, Capt. PHILIP R. CLARKE, went up this afternoon to City Point, under flag of truce, for the purpose of bringing down exchanged prisoners. She will return, probably, on Tuesday morning. Capt. JOHN E. MULFORD, Third New-York, goes in the boat as truce officer. Col. LUDLOW, of Gen. DIX's staff, returned, yesterday, in the Henry Burden from City Point, having negotiated an exchange with Major OLLD, the rebel Commissioner.

Previous to the battle of Murfreesboro, an entire exchange had been effected, of prisoners on both sides. That battle gave the Confederates 4,000 Union prisoners, while 2,000 rebels fell into the hands of ROSECRANS. Others since captured by us, in smaller fights, swell the number to about 2,500. Up to yesterday, but 1,500 prisoners from our forces had arrived in Richmond from Murfreesboro. It is yet uncertain whether the remainder will not be sent for exchange to Vicksburgh. According to DAVIS's Proclamation of 12th inst., all commissioned officers taken after that period, in States where slaves have been freed by President LINCOLN, will be handed over to the Governors of those States, to be imprisoned for violation of the several State laws, and thus will doubtless remain until the close of the War. Much disapproval, it is said, is expressed upon this course, by a number of DAVIS' advisers, but that functionary is inflexible. Objections are even raised to exchanging commissioned officers taken previously to the 12th inst., and it is expected that privates and non-commissioned officers, only, will be returned in the Express. Another visit to City Point, by Col. LUDLOW, will, therefore, be necessitated early next week. N.

From Old Point to Suffolk—The Army There and its Commander—Destiny of the Plantations Around Norfolk.

FORTRESS MONROE, Friday, Jan. 16, 1863.

A sojourner in this region naturally takes an occasional trip to Norfolk and Suffolk, as affording both news and variety. Four hours are pleasantly spent in visiting the latter place, forty miles from the Fortress, by steamboat, up the Nansemond River, and returning by the more frequently traveled route of the railway to Norfolk. The Nansemond averages five-eighths of a mile in width for about eighteen miles from the mouth, where a shoal exhibits itself above the water. Beyond this point the river becomes very narrow and tortuous, and the shores, from being moderately high, present only a series of swamps, near a quarter of a mile in width, beyond which elevated land again exists, studded at intervals with unpainted farm-houses. The channel of the Nansemond has a depth of eight to twenty feet as far as Suffolk, thirty miles from the mouth, with exception of the passage over a bar near the shoal above mentioned, where the depth is but seven feet at medium tide. Many mud banks exist along the whole course, and navigation requires great care. Toward the mouth of the river extensive truck or vegetable farming has been done of late years by Northern settlers, for the New-York, Philadelphia and Baltimore markets, which thus procured supplies two or three weeks earlier than from their own neighborhoods. Several creeks flow into the Nansemond, but none are navigable to steamboats except the West Branch Creek, which admits boats drawing five feet of water for a distance of six miles.

At Suffolk, a bridge prevents further navigation, but there is sufficient water for light draft steamers five miles beyond, and for small sloops or schooners, nearly ten miles.

Gen. PECK, who commands at Suffolk, is a short, lightly built man, considerably on the bright side of forty, and bears physiognomical evidences of shrewdness and ability. He is ably seconded by leading officers of his command. I will not enumerate them, nor yet give any idea of their forces. It is sufficient that they are strong, and have an abundance of earthworks, well mounted. The residents of Suffolk are, almost without exception, virulent Secessionists. Women and old men, only, are to be seen. Young men have all departed for the rebel army.

The railroad to Norfolk passes through the dismal Swamp, which, in spots where the land is somewhat elevated, presents small farms, with an exceedingly rich soil. To the unacclimated, fever and ague is apt to present itself in the Summer and Fall, and mosquitoes are abundant. Much of this land, for the entire distance between Suffolk and Norfolk, will be occupied after the war by Northern men. The late owners joined the rebel army, and have, in great part, died from wounds or disease. This applies not only to Dismal Swamp lands, but to all farms neighboring Norfolk. Widows, after the loss of both husband and negroes, will not attempt to work them, and heavy sales will be made. A considerable addition to the population of Norfolk has taken place since last Summer, when the city was deplorably depopulated. To the Southern ladies then promenading the principal streets, we may now add many wives and families of resident Northern officials and storekeepers. These, with a large proportion of the other sex, give it a populous aspect. Many stores, then closed, are now reopened by Northerners, and in a few days all traces of disloyal business men will have vanished. Gen. VIELE has issued an order, that all persons carrying on business in the city shall take the oath of allegiance or cease operations. In this latter case, their stores will be immediately occupied by Northern men. Attempts will be made by some to substitute nominal owners, but the deceit will be detected. The orders of Gen. VIELE, the Military Governor, occupy a column of the Norfolk Union. Among them is particularly noticeable one which states that all houses in Norfolk and Portsmouth, the residents of which shall exhibit towards the Government, its officers, or to loyal citizens on account of their loyalty, intentional disrespect, shall be at once taken possession of by the Provost-Marshal and turned over to the Quartermaster to be used as quarters, or for other Government purposes.

Much dissatisfaction exists among the troops of this department at not receiving their pay. N.

THE CAPTURE OF HOLLY SPRINGS.

The Facts of the Disgraceful Business—Who is Responsible.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

HOLLY SPRINGS, Miss., Saturday, Dec. 27, 1862.

As the stranger enters Holly Springs—a town so carefully spared in all respects by our troops when they first passed through it—he sees cars and once splendid dépôts, and the large secesh armory just handsomely fitted up as a hospital for our sick, in ashes; and approaching the square, windows shattered in houses and churches, and all the buildings on the east and most on the north side destroyed; the old Court-house in the centre, bored through windows and walls by shot and shell, the old clock in the tower still sublimely ticking on, doing too great a work to come down to the confusion; and streets filled with sour-faced soldiers, dressed in a mixture of rebel and National uniforms.

Paroled? "Yes, gobbled up, but we aren't to blame. We didn't know anything about it till the town swarmed with secesh. Our officers neither didn't anticipate it. They rushed into our camp before we were up. I just heard twelve strange strokes of a bell in town, and the road was black with their cavalry." So one after another tells the tale. All the various Railroad, Quartermaster and Commissary officers, indeed all the Colonels second in command, went to sleep in utter ignorance of any approach of the enemy, and waked up prisoners; consequently many thought it a complete surprise. Some say it began to leak out that a dispatch reached here the night before, warning the Commander of his danger, and urging him to defend the place at all hazards. But Col. MURPHY says his force was inadequate, (how does he know?—he did not wake them, much less allow them to fight the foe,) and that he was instructed not to send his cavalry out till daylight. But I will not lead you through all the reports, contradictory or otherwise, which I have encountered in reaching the facts.

On Thursday, the 18th, Col. MURPHY sent information to Oxford that Gen. SULLIVAN had ordered a portion of his force to Jackson, and was answered, "Send none; you have none to spare from their present duties." Troops were sent (FULLER's Brigade) from Oxford to Jackson. Soon Col. MURPHY telegraphed that all the troops at La Grange and Grand Junction had gone to Jackson, and inquired if he should send some companies to those points, stating that he had cars to forward them. He was ordered to send two companies—not to defend the town, but "our stores."

Col. DICKEY, moving with a small cavaly force to destroy the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, below Lapello, saw and skirmished with a rebel cavalry force, moving north, and sent several messengers with the information, who never arrived.

The fact, however, reached Gen. GRANT, and supposing they were attempting to cut off DICKEY, he ordered out two brigades for his protection.

On Tuesday afternoon, the 19th, Col. DICKEY returned in person to headquarters, and before dark Col. MURPHY was telegraphed that a large rebel cavalry force would probably encamp that night at Rocky Ford, and to look out and hold himself in readiness for an attack.

Reviewing the facts, Gen. GRANT again telegraphed commanders at various posts above the river, Holly Springs, Waterford, Grand Junction, and even Bolivar, that a large force of rebel cavalry was moving north, probably to cut our communications, and to hold themselves in readiness for an attack, and defend the railroad and our stores at all hazards.

Col. MURPHY then inquired where Rocky Ford is, and whether he should send out his cavalry.

He was again ordered "to hold the railroad and stores at all hazards, but not to send out his cavalry so far, so late, when the enemy might any moment surprise them," until morning.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

The Dead of the Sullivan-Street Church.

CONTINUED EXCITEMENT AMONG THE SURVIVING FRIENDS—AN INJUNCTION THREATENED.

The disclosures made in the TIMES of Monday, and republished in the other City papers yesterday, with regard to the desecration of the dead in the Sullivan-street Church vaults, have created a good deal of feeling among the friends of persons buried there, and yesterday large numbers of them gathered around the church, eager to ascertain the disposition that had been made of their friends' remains. Although the removal of the bodies is to be made hereafter under the direct superintendence of an employe of the City Inspector's Office, all will doubtless be properly done; yet there seems to be a strong feeling among many of the friends of those buried there against the action of the Trustees in disturbing the bodies at all. Having paid for the privilege of depositing them there, they claim that the Trustees have no right to remove the remains without their consent.

One gentleman stated that the remains of his mother, together with those of a brother and several children, were buried in the vault, and he was very emphatic in his denunciation of the Trustees of the church for the action which they have taken in the removal of bodies from the place.

One lady, accompanied by a number of ladies visited the place and desired to enter the vaults for the purpose of discovering the remains of her child and taking charge of them. She was informed that it was very dark within the vaults and that it would be almost impossible to find the coffin in which the body had been buried.

It was the unanimous opinion of all present, after an inspection of the vaults, that the removal of between 3,000 and 4,000 bodies lying in the subterranean chambers was entirely unnecessary, and an utterly unjustifiable desecration of the dead, against which the entire community should raise its voice, and condemn in the strongest terms. "It is perfectly revolting to my feelings," said a gentleman who had called to look after the body of a relative, "to know that his bones have been packed in a box with a number of skeletons. If they (the trustees) had only notified me, I would have attended to the matter, and seen that the remains were removed. But as it is, they gave me no notice, and they seem to care nothing at all about the feelings of those who have friends buried here." Others answered in the same strain, and one gentleman stated that he would wait upon a lawyer immediately, and have an injunction served upon the trustees, restraining them from disturbing the coffins any further.

It will be impossible for the friends of those whose remains have already been emptied indiscriminately into the large boxes to preserve their identity, but in future the utmost care will be taken by Mr. TRAVERS, of the City Inspector's Department, to protect the rights and feelings of all persons interested, and to afford them every possible facility for the preservation and identification of the bodies. It is highly probable, however, that a stop will be put to the entire proceeding by the action of the Courts. There would seem to be no real necessity for removing the bodies at all, even if the right were undisputed; and if the trustees of the Church are not able to sell the property to the colored congregation now occupying it, without catering to their superstitious whims, they had better seek a customer somewhere else.

ANOTHER CASE OF ABORTION.

A Williamsburgh Physician Suspected—The Wife of a Soldier of the Seventh Regiment, New-York Volunteers, the Victim—Post-Mortem Examination Made by the Deputy Coroner.

Yesterday afternoon another of those cases which of late have become so frequent in this City, was brought to the notice of Coroner COLLIN. The victim in this time a Mrs. ROSA ABNER, the wife of a soldier who, for more than twelve months past, has been absent from his home and family, engaged in the service of his country, as a member of the Seventh Regiment, New-York Volunteers, better known, perhaps, as the "Steuben Guard."

At a late hour on Monday evening Mrs. ABNER died at her residence, No. 184 Stanton-street, in great agony. A short time previous to her death she called a brother-in-law to her bedside and told him she had a communication of much importance to make—that she believed she was a dying woman, and whatever statements she made were uttered in view of speedy death. She then stated to her relative that a few weeks since she found herself enceinte, and wishing to avoid the shame and disgrace of an exposure, a respectable physician of Williamsburgh was consulted, and an abortion, by means of instruments, was produced by the aforesaid physician. This occurred something more than two weeks ago. At about the time the treatment by the Williamsburgh doctor commenced, the victim was removed from her then place of residence to the house where she died, No. 184 Stanton-street. During the last week of her life, such were the unfavorable symptoms, and so great was the agony she was compelled to endure, that much against the will and wish of her attendant physicians, of Williamsburgh, the deceased and her friends determined to have other medical aid, and therefore Dr. NAGLEY was called in. He soon became satisfied that the patient had been in the hands of a professional abortionist. Several persons in the house where she died were also very strong in their belief as to the same state of facts, but it appears that none of them were sufficiently certain upon the subject to warrant them in making known their suspicions.

When the information of Mrs. A.'s death was conveyed to Coroner COLLIN, together with some of the facts and circumstances which had transpired during her last hours, that official at once began an investigation of the case. His Deputy, Dr. ROBINSON, in company with Drs. NAGLEY, BERGOLA and BELDEN, went to the place and made a post-mortem examination of the remains. The unanimous opinion of these physicians is, that the deceased died by reason of injuries inflicted upon her by instruments used in procuring an abortion, and that the operation must have been performed from a week to ten days prior to her death.

Owing to the difficulty in securing the attendance of witnesses, the Coroner deemed it advisable to postpone the taking of the testimony in the case until 10 o'clock this morning, at which time it will be proceeded with at the Eleventh Precinct Station-house.

A warrant has been issued for the apprehension of the physician who is charged with this grave offence against the laws of the State and the morals of society, but up to a late hour last evening no information of his arrest was received. His name is withheld from the public at this time for fear that the ends of justice might be defeated if it were divulged.

The deceased is represented as having been a fine-looking woman, about 28 years of age, born in England. She has left no children to mourn her untimely end.

Great excitement has been produced among the friends of the deceased, and in the neighborhood where the transaction occurred. Coroner COLLIN, and his Deputy, Dr. ROBINSON, are deserving of much credit for the energetic manner in which they are pursuing the investigation. They are determined that nothing on their part shall be left undone to stop the increase of the crime involved in this case. It is stated that no less than ten cases of this nature,—some of them of a very aggravated character—have been brought to light in this vicinity within the last three months.

The Ball Up.

SKATING AT CENTRAL PARK AND PONDS IN THE VICINITY.

There was a steady, hard frost all through Monday night, and yesterday morning the ice on the lower pond in the Central Park was pronounced thick and solid enough to bear any number of skaters that might please to crowd upon it. So, at quite an early hour the "ball" was run up, and all the cars that ran from the Park to the lower part of the City bore the usual announcements of the fact.

The Winter has hitherto been—with the exception of an occasional two or three-day cold snap—so extremely mild that there have really been no opportunities for serious attempts at skating. The boys have managed to get some amusement on the promiscuous patches of water with which the thinly settled regions of town abound, but the skating season, properly so called, had not fairly commenced until yesterday, and then it was scarcely inaugurated with sufficient enthusiasm to justify any allusion to it as a carnival. The atmosphere was not dry and bracing; there was nothing clear and crisp in the aspect of things; it was dull and cloudy, with a shrewd touch of east in the wind and apparent premonitions of approaching snow. Men who look upon skating as a business rather fancy such a day. They know the ice will keep in better condition than when the sun comes out to melt its surface, and the absence of the miscellaneous public affords them more room for the performance of intricate evolutions. Skaters of this class mustered in strong force, and had as fine a morning's practice as they could desire. They embellished every particularly smooth bit they could discover with no end of elaborate devices; they performed miracles on "outside edges," and otherwise disported themselves to their hearts' content, from breakfast-time till noon. To a considerable extent, they succeeded in rubbing off a good deal of the rust that ten months' inactivity had left upon their "runners" and their locomotive muscles.

Juveniles, whose parents fear to trust them on any frost-bound waters but of the Central Park, were also out in large numbers. It is known that their safety from thin places and air holes is there insured, and that no worse hurt can befall them than the bruises that arises from casual tumbles.

But the ladies cannot be tempted out unless there is a bright sun overhead, and that indefinable exhilarative influence in the air which inspire them with a love of exercise and adventure. Brilliant balmorals and bewildering gaiter boots were scarce, and the scene consequently lacked that bright variety and joyous grace which only the presence of women can produce. Still, there were enough present to relieve the throng of skaters and spectators from an appearance of absolute masculine monotony.

Toward the middle of the day a partial thaw set in, and in a short time the ice became too soft and slushy to afford much pleasure to those who still remained upon its surface. It was easily cut up, and falls upon it were not only painful, but were apt to soak the victim with a cold and searching moisture. In the afternoon it froze again, however, and there was promise of its continuing to do so all night.

A good many people on horseback and in carriages enlivened the Park drives; but not so many as might have been seen during the pleasanter days of last week. The outside ponds in the vicinity of the Park received their accustomed run of patronage from those who do not like to be under any kind of restriction—those who would prefer perfect liberty on one skate and a street-gutter, to the observance of rules and regulations on a pair of Boston rockers and the glassiest of well-kept lakes.

It is more than likely that the large pond will be in a fit state for public use to-day. If it is, and the day turns out favorable, there will, no doubt, be such a rush to the Park, and such "high jinks" and fun generally developed there, as to justify the immediate and appropriate use of the word carnival, or any other term that may occur to a describer's excited imagination.

Board of Supervisers.

A regular meeting of this Board was held yesterday, the President, Supervisor LITTLE, in the chair.

A communication was received from Mayor OPDYKE, vetoing the resolution authorizing the Police Commissioners to take their surplus fund and erect a Metropolitan Police Headquarters.

The grounds on which the Mayor vetoes the resolution are, that the county is called in it to provide for the entire cost of buildings which are for the benefit of the whole Metropolitan Police District—the provisions for charging the other counties embraced with an equal proportion of the amount being considered illegal; that, on a careful examination, he found that the appropriation of the surplus of the fund provided for Police purposes to the purchase of lots, and the erection of buildings, has been without warrant of law; that the act authorizing the Board to raise money, by tax, provides that the amount should be exclusively devoted to the specific object for which it was appropriated; and that the resolution of the Board of Supervisors of Nov. 7, 1861, under the authority of which the Board of Police expended $88,000, and called for $20,000 more was illegal. The veto, after suggesting that application might be made to the Legislature for the amount required, states that the attempt to provide for it in the manner proposed is not only illegal, but opens the door for great abuses, as it lends the sanction of the Board to the unjust and dangerous practice of needlessly taxing our citizens a larger sum than is really required for the support of the police, apparently to create a surplus fund to be used by the Police Commissioners for purposes not named in their estimates of anticipated expenses.

Supervisor PURDY spoke against the veto, which he called the most "silly communication that ever emanated from an official." The document took the usual course.

The Board appointed DANIEL F. O'BRIEN Clerk to the Second District Court, (Justice SWEENEY'S,) in place of THOS. F. PEERS, deceased.

On motion of Supervisor STUART, a Committee of Six were appointed to invite the commandants of the several regiments and military officials to appear before them with a view of establishing a uniform plan to carry out the provisions of the militia act of 1861-62.

Mr. PURDY renewed a former resolution, offered by him, asking the Mayor to nominate thirty marshals (in lieu of constables) as provided by law, fifteen of whom shall be chosen by each political party represented in the Board.

Mr. PURDY, in offering the resolution, stated that he desired that the responsibility should rest where it properly belonged. This Board were ready to act, and so desired the Mayor to know.

Mr. STUART was opposed to let any such resolution, making a political bargain, to go on their minutes. If the Mayor was to send names not suitable to a majority of the Board, they could reject them.

Mr. PURDY was a partisan, and he intended to see that the patronage of this Board was well shared by the Democratic party.

The Democrats had intended to do their best. If it had been a popular vote, not a Republican would be in that Board. Everything went well when the Democrats were around. He wished to God that they were in the Federal Capitol; they would soon make things straight. They were willing to give the Republicans half. The Mayor, however, wanted fifteen for himself, and let the others be divided among the Board, which would give the Democrats about seven.

The subject was finally laid over for future consideration, and after some further routine business the Board adjourned.

Mr. J. Ross Browne's Trip to Iceland.

Mr. BROWNE'S first lecture on Iceland was delivered before a large and intelligent audience, seated in the hall of the Historical Society. The lecture included an account of his journey from Frankfort to Iceland, by the way of Copenhagen and the Faroe Islands. A description of the town of Reykjavik, the capital of the dreary island, was illustrated by a handsome panoramic view, and the progress of the lecture was further illustrated by similar pictures, of which the view of the Great Geyser, the Stroher, and the singular Rock of Laws—where once sat the old Icelandic Parliament—were the most remarkable. Smaller sketches in water colors of characters met on the journey were also introduced.

Mr. BROWNE'S lecture abounded with humor. The elaborate preparations of a party of English tourists for their visit to the Geysers created great merriment, and the Icelandic guide—the Matteo Ximenes of this northern Alhambra—was also most happily described. This guide retained interesting reminiscences of previous visitors to his dreary home, and pointed out the very places once occupied by such eminent foreigners as Lord DUFFERIN, Prince NAPOLEON and PLINY MILES, giving particularly some refreshing anecdotes of the latter traveler and his pleasing book of Iceland travel. The lecture closed with the vivid and eloquent description of a night with the great Geyser.

Mr. BROWNE comes nearer to our ideal of a perfect specimen of the Albert Smith type than any of his predecessors. He has all the material, the traveling incident and humor. His next lecture insures a delightful entertainment to all who wish to attend.

GENERAL CITY NEWS.

COMFORT FOR OUR SOLDIERS.—We would suggest to our readers, and especially those interested in providing comforts for the sick and wounded soldiers, that toast is one of the greatest luxuries that can be sent them. A large quantity has been sent by the citizens of Albany, but all they can furnish is but a tithe of what is needed. The Surgeons who have used it, especially upon the battle-field, have been almost extravagant in praise of it, saying that the person who first suggested the plan has little idea what a blessing it has proved. Made of the aerated bread, and prepared (thoroughly dried,) in a baker's oven, it will keep for months, and a bowl of hot water is all that is needed to make it just as good as if freshly toasted. A barrel can be furnished for much less than one of crackers, while it is far more palatable and nutritious. To the poor sufferers who have, perhaps, lived on "hard tack" till they loathe it, it gives a grateful change, and to those wounded about the face, particularly, as it is easily masticated.

MRS. WASHINGTON A. BARTLETT IN COURT AS COMPLAINANT.—Yesterday afternoon, Mrs. WASHINGTON A. BARTLETT appeared before Alderman HALL, at the Tombs, and preferred a complaint against ANNIE O'LEARY, formerly a domestic in the family, whom she charges with having, on the 30th ult., stolen diamond jewelry valued at $220 from a drawer in the bedroom, to which no one except the family and ANNIE had access. It is charged that the girl suddenly left the house, and the day following the jewelry was missed. ANNIE having been arrested by Detective REACH, was committed to the Tombs for trial. She stoutly denied her guilt.

DR. STORRS' FUNERAL DISCOURSE.—Rev. Dr. STORRS' funeral discourse over the remains of the late Gen. MITCHEL, at the Church of the Pilgrims, last week, of which the TIMES published a brief sketch, though brief and unpretending, was such a dignified yet brilliant piece of eloquence, that we hope to see it published in some permanent form. It would be a memento of the Astronomer-General, which all those who admired his life and regret his death will be glad to preserve.

AMEN TO THE PROCLAMATION.—WENDELL PHILLIPS will speak at the Cooper Institute, this evening, upon the theme which is uppermost in everybody's mind, viz., "The Rebellion, and How to Put it Down." Even those who do not agree with him may find pleasure in listening to his silvery eloquence.

AWARD OF CONTRACTS.—At a meeting of the Board of Contracts Monday morning, the contract for repairing fire apparatus in the Western District was awarded to HENRY SILER, at $1,126. Mr. SILER also received the contract for the Eastern District at the same price. The contract for repairing hose in the Western District was awarded to EDWARD MCGONIGLE, at $760; and to JAMES DUGANNE, for the Eastern District, at $500. JAMES WHITE received the contract for repairing lamps in the Western District, at $1,250; and EDWARD WHITE received the contract for doing the same work in the Eastern District. To JOHN H. TOBITT was awarded the contract for printing the minutes of the Board, at 35 cents per page. Bids were received for building docks at the foot of North Seventh-street, South Fourth-street and South Sixth-street, which were referred.

THE BROOKLYN PRESS.—The publishers of the Brooklyn Eagle, News and Times (E. D.) have decided to raise the price of their respective papers from one to two cents per copy, to take effect on and after Monday next, the 26th inst.

BURGLARY.—The house of Mr. CHARLES HICKMAN, No. 133 Franklin-avenue, was feloniously entered yesterday morning, and robbed of articles valued at $23.

BROOKLYN CITY COURT, Jan. 21.—Nos. 65, 66, 69.

The Kings County Circuit Court, having run down the Term Calendar, will adjourn to-day.

Action to Recover for the Death of a Husband—Negligence of Deceased Defeats the Case.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT.

Before Justice Hoyt.

Winshimer, administratrix, &c., vs. Struelens & Palmer.—The plaintiff brought her action to recover for the alleged killing of her husband. The deceased, as alleged, had been in the employ of the defendants, and while in their employ was killed by the falling of an elevator used in their store.

The defence was that the deceased was upon the elevator at the time of the accident, and that there was a printed notice upon it forbidding all persons to get upon it when in use.

Upon the trial it appeared that deceased had violated this rule and met his death in consequence.

A nonsuit was thereupon granted.

Max Goepp for plaintiff; G. E. & M. Gibbs for defendant.

New Trials, where Issue was Joined in the Marine or District Court for an Amount Exceeding $50—Where Should They be Had?

COMMON PLEAS—GENERAL TERM.

Before Judges Daly, Brady and Miller.

John McIlheany vs. Elias Wasson.—This was an appeal from a judgment obtained in a District Court for more than $50, and the only question to be decided was, whether, under the provisions of chapter 5 of title 11 of the Code, as amended April 23, 1862, a new trial must be had in this Court, in all cases of appeal from the Marine and District Courts when there has been an issue found, and the amount involved exceeds the sum of fifty dollars.

When a judgment has been rendered by the General Term of the Marine Court, or by a Justice of the District or Justice's Courts of the City, the appeal shall be to this Court; and the appeal from the Marine Court must, like that from the District Courts, be taken within twenty days after the judgment. In the City of Buffalo, the appeals from the Courts of Justices of that city must be to the Superior Court therein.

When the judgment has been rendered by any of the other Courts enumerated in the preceding section (351,) that is, Justices Courts of other cities than New-York and Buffalo, the Municipal Court of the City of Brooklyn, and Courts of Justices of the Peace throughout the State, the appeal must be to the County Court of the county; and on such appeals where issue has been joined, and the amount involved exceeds $50, a new trial shall be had in such County Court.

The Court, per HILTON, J., say: It seems to us quite plain that the expression "such appeal," in the connection in which it is used in this section, refers to the appeal which is required to be taken to the County Court ex nomine, and has no relation to the appeals which must be taken to this Court, and to the Superior Court of the City of Buffalo.

The remaining sections of the Title, which were amended at the same time, are in no sense repugnant to this construction, but, on the contrary, harmonize with it.

Therefore, in all cases of appeal to this Court from the Marine and District Courts, the former practice still prevails, unaffected by the amendments of 1862, except so far as the costs therein are regulated by the amendments to section 371.

The judgment affirmed.

Decisions.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

Before Justice Sutherland.

The Dry Dock Savings Institution vs. Palmer et al.—Judgment ordered.

Hains, &c., vs. Barger, &c.; McCoin vs. Smith.—Motions granted.

Whitlock, Jr., vs. Bradford.—Defendant's default opened; answer, with affidavit of merits, to be served within two days.

Abbey vs. Atwood.—Motion granted; to be placed on Calendar for first Friday in February.

Cunningham vs. Buckingham (two cases.)—Motion granted with stay of twenty-five days and $10 costs, to abide event.

In the Matter of the Assignment of Sturgis, Shaw & Co. to George C. Haven.—Report confirmed and order granted.

Mehringer &c. vs. Aldrich et al.—Motion granted.

Gen. Rosecrans to his Army.

The following is the address of Major-Gen. ROSECRANS to the army, on the morning of the 31st December, after severe skirmishing throughout the previous day and pending the great battle of the 31st:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE CUMBERLAND,
IN FRONT OF MURFREESBORO, Dec. 31, 1862.

The General commanding desires to say to the soldiers of the Army of the Cumberland, that he was well pleased with their conduct yesterday. It was all that he could have wished for. He neither saw nor heard of any skulking. They behaved with the coolness and gallantry of veterans. He now feels perfectly confident, with God's grace and their help, of striking this day a blow for the country the most crushing, perhaps, which the rebellion has yet sustained! Soldiers! the eyes of the whole nation are upon you; the very fate of the nation may be said to hang on the issues of this day's battle. Be true, then, to yourselves, true to your own manly character and soldierly reputation; true to the love of your dear ones at home, whose prayers ascend this day to God for your success. Be cool. I need not ask you to be brave. Keep ranks. Do not throw away your fire. Fire slowly, deliberately—above all, fire low—and be always sure of your aim. Close readily in upon the enemy, and when you get within charging distance, rush upon him with the bayonet. Do this, and victory will certainly be yours. Recollect that there are hardly any troops in the world that will stand a bayonet charge, and that those who make it, therefore, are sure to win. By command of Major-Gen. ROSECRANS.

Fire at Catskill.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

CATSKILL, N. Y., Sunday, Jan. 18, 1863.

A fire broke out at the head of Maine-street, in this village, last night at about 11½ o'clock, and consumed some six buildings, mostly occupied as dwellings. Loss from $8,000 to $10,000, partially covered by insurance. Yours, &c. X.

IN ERROR.—The New-York TIMES, we are happy to be able to assure it, is entirely in error in its interpretation of the recent refusal of the House of Representatives to agree to the motion of Mr. COLFAX, to discharge the Committee of Ways and Means from the further consideration of the proposition to reduce the duty on foreign printing paper from 35 to ten per centum, and to consider it (in the House) immediately. Their action on that occasion simply meant that they declined to give the subject precedence over all other business—that's all. Out of forty-seven members of the House with whom we have spoken with reference to this proposition, we found but one opposed to it. All the rest appreciated its justice and propriety. Under these circumstances we apprehend, that there can be little doubt that when it comes up in its regular turn it will be adopted by an overwhelming majority.—Washington Star.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

The Press correspondent at the headquarters of the Army of the Potomac telegraphed last night that there was "nothing to telegraph."

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue estimates the amount to be derived from all sources excepting stamp duties, during the current fiscal year ending with June next, at $61,777,799. From stamps he expects the receipts to be $15,000,000—making, in all, $76,777,799. The following fiscal year he expects will yield not less than $150,000,000.

A letter from Key West, under date of Jan. 12, states that a force of 2,500 men accompanied the fleet recently sent to undertake the recapture of Galveston.

The Navy Department has ordered Capt. BOGGS, of the Varuna, after the pirate Alabama, in the first-class frigate Sacramento, to sail from Portsmouth, N. H. He will leave this week.

The New-Bedford (Mass.) Mercury notices a letter which was received in that city on Saturday last from a seaman on board the frigate San Jacinto, dated at Point-à-Petre, Guadaloupe, Dec. 25. The San Jacinto left St. Thomas on the 20th ult., in pursuit of two rebel schooners, which the American Consul informed them had left the day previous, loaded with ammunition and guns for a steamer outside, and after a pleasant excursion of three days returned to port. The American Consul at Point-à-Petre informed the Captain of the San Jacinto that SEMMES had burned an American ship belonging to Maine, lying at Sombrero Island—a ship which the writer says they saw at that island, as the San Jacinto touched there on the 17th and remained two days.

The schooner Hampton, with a cargo for the rebels, has just been captured at Dividing Creek. The vessel took in her cargo at Baltimore, according to instructions received by her owners from the notorious rebel, GEORGE N. SANDERS.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, yesterday, a bill to pay the French Spoliation claims was reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The bill to authorize letters-of-marque and reprisal was reported back from the Naval Committee with amendments. Mr. BALE gave notice that he should call it up at an early day. A bill for the prompt and uniform administration of military justice and the better government of the army was introduced by Mr. WILSON, of Massachusetts. The bill to alter the judicial districts of the United States, placing Michigan and Ohio in the Seventh District, was passed. The bill authorizing the President to negotiate treaties with certain Indian tribes, was passed. The bill to reorganize the Court of Claims was taken up, notwithstanding a protest from Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio, and debated until the Senate found itself without a quorum, when it adjourned. The Special order—the bill relating to the discharge of State prisoners—was postponed to await developments regarding the action of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, which has recently decided unconstitutional the arrest of persons interfering with the draft.

In the House, it was decided to refer the President's Message, embodying his approval of the $100,000,000 Treasury Note bill, to the Committee of Ways and Means, and it was ordered to be printed. The Select Committee on the proposed new road between Washington and New-York was authorized to send for persons and papers, and to examine witnesses under oath. The report of the Committee on Elections, that Mr. VANDEVER, of Iowa, has not been entitled to a seat in the House since he was mustered into the United States service as Colonel of the Ninth Iowa Regiment, in 1861, was, after a long debate, adopted. The question was then raised that the resolution expelled Mr. VANDEVER, and that the Constitution required a two-thirds vote in such cases, but the Speaker overruled the point, and pending a vote on an appeal from this decision, the House went into Committee on the bill to provide ways and means for the support of the Government. Amendments to the first section, as agreed upon by the Committee of Ways and Means, were agreed to, but the House got no further before the adjournment.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE.

In the Senate, yesterday, a bill to grant State aid to the Albany and Susquehanna Railroad was introduced. The Judiciary Committee was requested to prepare a general bill legalizing town bounties to volunteers.

The Assembly will be in session again this evening, when the Speakership struggle will be again renewed.

GENERAL NEWS.

By the steamship Arabia, which arrived at Halifax yesterday morning, we receive advices from Europe two days later than those by the Hibernia at Portland, published yesterday. Reports were again current that the Emperor NAPOLEON intends to recommend an armistice between the North and the South. The American Minister, Mr. DAYTON, had had interviews with the French Minister for Foreign Affairs, and also with the Emperor. It was also asserted that the English Government would persevere in refusing to interfere in American matters in any manner. Sympathizing addresses to President LINCOLN had been adopted in London and Birmingham. The British Parliament has been called to assemble in February. The Liverpool Chamber of Commerce have resolved to give a suitable reception to the officers of the first ship from America with provisions for the distressed operatives. The main English journals indignantly repudiate the recent advocacy of Slavery by the London Times, on Scriptural grounds. A ship had reached Liverpool with 1,700 bales of cotton, from the Cape of Good Hope, raised from Sea Island cotton seed. Another vessel brought 350 bales from Portugal. A new brigade of French troops was to embark for Mexico about the middle of January. Heated debates on the Mexican question were taking place in the Spanish Cortes. The Liverpool Cotton market was quiet and unchanged. Breadstuffs quiet, but steady. Provisions dull, but firm. Consols for money, 93¼@93¾. Illinois Central Shares, 41@40½ discount; Eries, 43½@44.

The Second Emancipation Jubilee was held last evening at the Cooper Institute, Mr. JOHN PETERSON, colored, occupying the chair. Addresses were made by the Rev. J. B. W. SLOANE, THEODORE TILTON, Esq., OLIVER JOHNSON, Esq., Mr. T. MORRIS CHESTER, colored, and the Rev. HY HIGHLAND GARNET, minister of the Colored Church in Marion-street.

In the Court of Oyer and Terminer, yesterday, the trial of HENRY OLIVER for manslaughter, in killing the second mate of the ship Francis B. Cutting, was concluded, and the jury retired at noon. They had not agreed upon a verdict at a late hour last evening. The case was summed up for the prisoner by EDWIN JAMES, Esq., and on behalf of the people by Assistant District-Attorney GARVIN.

In the Court of Sessions, yesterday, before Judge MCCUNN, CLARA BARBARA VOLKER, indicted for grand larceny, pleaded guilty to petit larceny, and was sentenced to the Penitentiary for six months. GEORGE JOHNSON pleaded guilty to an attempt at grand larceny and was remanded for sentence on Saturday.

The Stock market was active and buoyant yesterday, and left off at firm prices. The price of Gold is 147½ ₱ cent., about the same as on Monday. Exchange, 162½ ₱ cent.

Breadstuffs were in active demand, yesterday, at buoyant prices, as were also Sugars, Teas, Whisky, Tallow, Metals, New-Orleans Molasses, Wool, and Foreign Liquors. Cotton was decidedly brisker, and up to the extraordinary high figures of 75½c.@76½c. for Middlings, ₱ lb. A fair business was reported in most other articles. Freights were inactive.

The Live Stock markets are active this week, and prices of all kinds rule higher, in consequence of light receipts. Cool weather favors the consumption of meat, and butchers inclined to lay in a good stock; but were prevented by a light supply and high prices.... Beeves number 4 127 for the week, 3 687 of which were sold at Forty-fourth-street. They were in good demand, at high rates, on Monday; but large additions on Tuesday checked operations, and reduced quotations toward the close of the market to the figures of last week. The advance was about ½c. on the whole transactions, making the best market for months. The average of the sales reached 8¼c. ₱ lb., net weight, and everything was sold off.... Sheep and lambs are scarce, and worth ½c. @¾c. ₱ lb. more than one week ago. Fat, heavy sheep have been weighed out at 7c. ₱ lb., live weight. Fair stock sells quickly at 6¾c.... Live hogs are in great request, the demand using up the stock as fast as it arrives. An advance of ½c. ₱ lb. is quoted, fat, heavy corn-fed hogs selling at 5¾c.@5¾c.; light hogs, 5c., and still-fed, 4¾c.

The Deficiencies of West Point.

We are not at all prepared to accept the very bitter spirit lately manifested in the Senate against West Point as a just exponent of the feelings of the people; but it is undeniable that the institution is no longer the popular favorite it was. The Senate minority did wrong in seeking to make an end of the institution by withholding the appropriation necessary to its life; and yet it is perfectly true that the rebellion has brought out great evils and deficiencies in its management, never appreciated before. The aim should be not to destroy but to correct.

The primary error has been in not making native capacity the great criterion in determining the admissions into the institution. Generally this is the last consideration which influences the Congressman who has the nominating power. We may say that in nine cases out of ten, the disposition to serve some personal or political friend controls the entire matter. It is a mere chance if the boy actually selected from the dozens of applicants has any natural gifts whatever. This faithless style of performing a grave public duty, of necessity, fills West Point mainly with mediocrity, when in fact it ought to be the training-place of the very brightest young men in the land. Hon. M. F. ODELL, member from one of the Brooklyn Districts, did a noble thing, last year, in promising the nomination, which was in his hands, to the best male scholar of right age in the public schools; and it was a most worthy boy who took the prize. Had our Congressmen in time past been equally true to the public interests in this important matter, we should not now have such reason to complain of the dearth of genuine genius among our military leaders in the present war.

It has been too generally taken for granted that a professional education at West Point makes a commander. It does no such thing; all it can do is to facilitate and improve. The commander is born, or, with all his science, he is no commander at all. Nature must give her certificate first; and if she has withheld it, no commission that West Point can authorize is worth the parchment it is writen on. Nobody doubts that West Point, with its severe studies, is well able to turn out methodical, minute, pains-taking, exact men—men skillful in engineering, and proficient in strategical lines, intrenched camps, coast fortifications, and all the principles and theories of military science. But to think and determine, not in the recitation-room, or the parade-ground, but on the field, amidst the thunders of artillery and the flashing of musketry; to foresee and forefend dangers and difficulties; to supply unexpected deficiencies; to observe with a sure intuition and strike with timely impetuosity; to rise above ordinary rules in extraordinary contingencies; to know and to influence human nature, and to hold the affections and wills of men, as well as their bodies, in the hand—these are qualities indispensable to the great commander, and which West Point can no more bestow than she can make a racer of a dray-horse.

We are willing to go further and say, that it admits of serious doubt whether the almost exclusive mathematical training of West Point does not operate as a positive injury to all the higher commanding qualities. The profoundest philosopher of the generation, Sir WILLIAM HAMILTON, declared that "an excessive study of the mathematical sciences not only does not prepare, but absolutely incapacitates the mind for those intellectual energies which philosophy and life require." Probably this is too strongly stated. But it is certain that the most successful Generals of our Revolutionary war were men of little or no scientific training; that the most successful General of the last war with England was the civilian ANDREW JACKSON; that the most difficult and memorable battle of the Mexican war, the battle where the odds against us were four to one, was fought and won by Gen. TAYLOR, an officer of no book-science whatever; that the most successful of NAPOLEON'S Marshals were originally unlearned soldiers from the ranks; that WELLINGTON himself could hardly have solved a problem in Euclid; and that the two men who were more instrumental than any other fifty in suppressing the gigantic Indian rebellion were the civilian Sir JOHN LAWRENCE, and the soldier, HENRY HAVELOCK, who made up his lack of book science by a will that sent him like a thunderbolt through rain, sun and fever, and countless hosts of a disciplined and desperate enemy.

We by no means intend to disparage the value of a complete military education. Where there is the genius to command, it aids it. Where there is no such genius, it at all events can make the thorough-bred subaltern. But to render West Point what it ought to be, greater care should be taken to supply it with the best natural endowments to be found among the rising generation. Then there should be an assurance that the course of study there is in all respects adapted to its aims. This, to say the least, is now very doubtful. We must suppose that the Government itself has such a doubt; otherwise it would not have enlarged the curriculum from four years to five, as was done two or three years since; which arrangement, we suppose, would have continued but for the rebellion. Our own full belief is, that the education at West Point has been too strictly professional, and consequently too narrow. The divine, the lawyer, the physician has, or may have, the benefit of a four years' college course, and then enter upon his professional studies proper, which occupy three years further. The military aspirant, on the other hand, enters upon his professional studies at once, with no base but the elementary branches; and if these studies remain strictly professional, the result almost necessarily is a very one-sided sort of discipline and culture. To this professional narrowness in thought and reasoning, more than to any other one thing, is to be ascribed the extraordinary moral phenomenon of so many graduates of the institution disregarding the most sacred dictates of honor and duty, in treason to the Government that had educated them to be its special defenders. West Point has as good a right as any institution in the land to a complete and generous course of study that develops every form of intellectual force and moral worth. We hope yet to see the day when this will be realized.

Mexican Affairs in Congress.

On Monday, Senator MCDOUGAL brought the subject of Mexican affairs before Congress and the country, by offering in the Senate a series of pointed resolutions, relative to the action of the French in Mexico.

Mr. MCDOUGAL'S resolutions aver that the French Government is engaged in an attempt to subjugate Mexico by an armed force, in violation of international law and the tripartite agreement between England, France and Spain, signed in London, Oct. 31, 1861, the sincerity of which was assured to this Government by the several foreign Ministers resident in Washington. On this averment, Mr. MCDOUGAL'S resolutions assume that it is the duty of our Government to require the Government of France to withdraw its forces from Mexico and "that it is the duty of this Republic now and at all times to lend such aid to the Republic of Mexico as is or may be required to prevent the forcible interposition of any of the States of Europe in the political affairs of that Republic."

Senator MCDOUGAL'S resolutions are simply a bold and distinct attempt to sustain the "Monroe Doctrine." The question at once arises, are we in a condition to sustain that doctrine? Shall we throw down the gauntlet and bid defiance to France, and perhaps to all Europe combined? or shall we take the declaration of the various European Powers that they intend no subjugation or undue political control on this Continent? and then by a temporizing policy, go on with the hope of drifting through the shoals and quicksands of European interests, influences and diplomacy, until the ship of State is clear of the lee shore, all taught and tight from stem to stern, ready to let fly its broadsides on each and every foe, no matter how many they may be or from whence they come?

Senator MCDOUGAL'S resolutions open up a subject that has been enveloped in much mystery, and one upon which the public certainly has no clear or distinct understanding. We have repeatedly asked, what cause has France to make war upon our neighboring Republic? But no response is made. Mexico has violated no treaty with France. Mexico owes France no money, and as to redressing outrages, the French residents in Mexico have repeatedly protested against the landing of an armed French force upon Mexican soil. The Emperor NAPOLEON himself declared to the Peruvian Minister on New-Year's day, that nothing was further from his intentions than interference with the autonomy of the Spanish-American Republics, and as to Mexico, he had no desire or intention to subjugate or unduly interfere in the internal affairs of that country.

But the Emperor NAPOLEON has designs in Mexico, or he would not now have a large armed force in the country, the expense of which, according to the recent French Budget, had, up to the date of that report, reached 80,000,000 of francs. What then are the designs of France in Mexico? Let them be made known.

We have never believed that France would meet with any great or lasting success in her causeless, unnatural and wicked attack upon Mexico, whether with or without any well-defined purpose. Nevertheless, her action in the matter is a source of deep irritation. Senator MCDOUGAL'S resolutions may at least prove opportune in eliciting the information so much needed to clear up the matter, and show the country what its duty is in the premises.

The British Smiths and Browns.

There is one portion of the intercepted correspondence of the Confederate Government with their agents in England which will, we do not doubt, inspire the loyal public with more misgiving as to the future than anything which has yet come to light. We have borne, if not with equanimity, at least with fortitude, during two long years, the covert or avowed hostility of the influential classes in Europe. The rank and fashion of England and the Continent are all against us, or use their immense moral influence in bringing us and our cause into disrepute, in exaggerating our reverses, and discrediting our victories. Much as this chagrined us for a time, everybody knows it has not at all disheartened us. Our soldiers have fought just as bravely as if their praises were on every lip in the "gilded saloons" of the aristocracy, and have borne their hardships just as firmly as if there were a thousand duchesses and countesses occupied every night in making pie for them. There is, however, a limit to human endurance, and we greatly fear the revelations made in the intercepted dispatches have brought us close upon it. We needly hardly say that the discovery which so profoundly discourages us is, that, as appears by Mr. MEMMINGER'S dispatch of the 25th October to Mr. MASON, the Confederate Plenipotentiary in London, SMITH, of Glasgow, and BROWN, of Edinburgh, have both gone over to the enemy, and are now affording aid and assistance to the rebels. The importance of this incident must furnish our excuse for a second time publishing the dispatch which reveals it:

MR. MEMMINGER TO MR. MASON.

(Triplicate.)
TREASURY DEPARTMENT, C. S. A.,
RICHMOND, Oct. 25, 1862.

Hon. J. M. Mason, Commissioner Confederate States London.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of 1st August, inclosing triplicate of yours of the 22d April last, is just received. That will excuse the seeming neglect to Mr. JAMES SMITH, of Glasgow, in returning him a bond for his investment of £100. The sterling is now worth 150 per cent. premium, which makes the bill for £100 worth in dollars $1,150, for which sum a certificate of Government stock has been issued in favor of Mr. JAMES SMITH, and will be retained in this Department, subject to his order, and a bill drawn for the £100.

Your letter of the 1st of August also advises of the desire of Mr. JAMES BROWN, of Edinburgh, to contribute twenty-five pounds sterling. I have made the same arrangement for this amount, and have directed a certificate of stock to be issued in his name for two hundred and fifty dollars, as we cannot issue for fractions of less than fifty dollars. This certificate will be retained, subject to his order, and a bill drawn for the twenty-five pounds.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,
C. G. MEMMINGER, Secretary of Treasury.

Of any sympathy with us and our cause from the Smiths and Browns of Great Britain we need hardly say we had long ago given up all hope. One of the Irish Browns, as the world knows, is now in the service of the Confederacy, as Assistant Secretary of State, and his influence upon the tribe at home has of course been pernicious. And then, everybody who knows anything of the English and Irish Smiths and Browns, is familiar with their practice of acting, as far as possible, on all social and political questions, with the Cavendishes and Herberts and Percys and Russells. A genuine English Smith or Brown is always true to his order, and is never found countenancing any movement which is at all vulgar or democratic, either in its origin or its tendencies. But in the Scotch branch of the family we confess, we had every confidence. They have, up to the present, given no indication of any desire or intention to favor the rebellion. Even after our disasters last Summer, when the National cause was at the lowest ebb, no word of reproach or scorn reached us from one of these ancient and honorable clans. The American public was therefore fairly justified in believing that they would preserve this attribute of reason to the last, and that if they did not extend to us the benefit of their countenance, they would at least withhold it in like manner from our enemies. This hope is now gone. The celebrated JAMES SMITH, of Glasgow, and the equally renowned JAMES BROWN, of Edinburgh, have both thrown off the mask, and have supplied the Confederate Government, through its Envoy Extraordinary in London, the one with the sum of one hundred pounds, and the other with the sum of twenty-five pounds. We wish we could cast any doubt upon this extraordinary and serious occurrence, but the dispatch in triplicate of the rebel Secretary of the Treasury, at once attests the authenticity of the story, and the importance which he attaches to it. By this time, doubtless, SMITH, of Glasgow has got his bond for the one hundred pounds, and BROWN, of Edinburgh, has honored the bill drawn upon him for the twenty-five. So the deed is done.

It only remains for us now to consider the effect of all this upon us and our fortunes. That the news, coming so soon after the disasters of Fredericksburgh, Vicksburgh and Galveston, will give a blow to public confidence, we fear is only too true. That it will elate the Confederates almost in the same degree that it depresses us, must also, we fear, be acknowledged. But if we are true to ourselves, this cannot exercise a decisive influence on the fortunes of the war. One hundred and twenty-five pounds, seasonable as the addition may prove to the rebel funds at present, cannot last very long in the face of expenditure on such a scale as their operations East and West just now involve. And then—and we confess this is our main reliance—it still remains to be seen whether all the Browns and Smiths will make common cause with these two JAMESES, and place their resources also at the disposal of MEMMINGER. If it was certain that they would do so, we should—there is no use in concealing it—tremble for the result. But we are assured by several reliable gentlemen, recently arrived from Scotland, that the Smiths and Browns of Glasgow and Edinburgh are not on good terms, and are pretty sure not to act in harmony for any length of time. Serious divisions, arising out of the intrusion of the hens of some into the back yards of others; disputes between the female members of the clan as to the mode of spelling the family names, touching the piano-forte performances of their daughters, and the claim of the Smiths and Browns to superiority in point of descent, have for some time prevailed amongst them; and if they have for the present been hushed up sufficiently to enable them to take concerted action with regard to the Confederacy, it has been due to the skillful diplomacy of Mr. MASON. But the calm is but temporary; the dissensions will, it is confidently expected, break out again, after the first evening party at which they meet. We must only do our duty like men, and hope for the best.

Between New-York and Washington.

No one has made the trip between New-York and Washington, by railroad, within the memory of man, without being convinced that it is the most uncomfortable route of travel, for its importance and amount of patronage, in the United States. The inconveniences of the trip have been owing mainly to the breaks at Philadelphia, Baltimore and Havre de Grace, and the transfers of passengers at these places from one set of cars to another. Whether these changes of cars, and the confusion and delays they occasion, have been owing to lack of enterprise or want of accommodation, on the part of the railroad companies forming the line, or are to be charged to the jealousy of State and municipal legislation, we are not prepared to say. If the latter, the railroad companies are not so much to blame. They have made, perhaps, the best time and the closest connections possible with the municipal privileges they enjoy. Erie, in the north corner of Pennsylvania, for years contended for the privilege of making all the Lake Shore travel between the East and West change cars amid the pea-nut and pie-stands of her chief street; and in this claim was sustained by the Legislature of the Keystone State. Philadelphia, we believe, has not entirely outgrown the village peevishness manifested at Erie. We observed lately in one of her leading journals, a violent protest against the use of her Broad-street for the accommodation of proposed through trains between New-York and Washington.

It can hardly be that the railroad companies between New-York and Boston would not go to the utmost of their privileges in facilitating travel; for they get infinite abuse and opposition on every opportunity for not doing so. We are not disposed to require of them what they have not the right and power to perform.

The movement in Congress to secure better railroad communication between New-York and Washington, we heartily approve. We need it. But if it be possible to secure the improved travel through existing roads—as we do not see why it is not—it is every way preferable. An air line road may be practicable, but it will not materially shorten the distance via Philadelphia and Baltimore. An air line would cost enormously, and being confined in its business to the through travel and freight between Washington and New-York, it would not begin to pay adequate dividends. If the Government were dragged into the enterprise, it would require a heavy subsidy for years to keep such a road going. The line passing through Philadelphia and Baltimore, these great centres of population and business, would be able to underwork always any rival road, and in the end bankrupt it. The sole achievement, therefore, of an air line road would be to impair the business of the existing roads to the extent of part of their through business. Is such a work worthy of the spirit of a magnanimous and just Government? There are, perhaps, thirty millions of dollars invested, all told, in the present direct railroad lines between New-York and Washington. It was invested in good faith—it can be induced, no doubt, to comply with the National demand for improved travel. If so, it would be a scandal to have its propositions rejected. Government needs to foster not ruin the investments of its citizens, for it is in the prosperity of its citizens that its own hope of credit exists.

A route between Washington and New-York, that would be considerably inland, is a desirable thing for such an emergency, for instance, as a foreign invasion. But such a road would not necessarily interfere with the rights of existing improvements. But a direct road, and a rival road to the line now used, can never be successful as a pecuniary enterprise; and, if it could be, would owe its success to a Government crusade against thirty millions of private capital, which would be utterly unwarrantable.

EFFECTS OF A GOOD RESOLUTION.—A few days ago the two Houses of Congress passed a resolution ordering that the soldiers who are fighting the battles of the Union, should be paid. Yesterday it was announced that Secretary CHASE had placed to the credit of the army Paymasters an aggregate amount sufficient to pay the whole of both the army and navy of the United States all their dues up to date. All owing to this joint resolution of Congress!

It is astonishing what a fine financial and military effect a good resolution has had. The wonder is that some member of Congress or of the Government did not sooner perceive where the hitch was that wronged the soldier of his pay, and kept his wife and children starving. It was the lack of a joint resolution of Congress, which might have been passed as well last July as now! Should it not be made somebody's business hereafter to look out for the interests of eight hundred thousand soldiers, and see that they do not suffer again, weary, weary months, for lack of a joint resolution of Congress? Let us keep a resolution standing for their benefit.

MISSOURI VS. MARYLAND—EXILES IN DISCORD.—One of the anomalies of the Confederate Congress is, that it has Senators and Representatives from the States of Missouri and Kentucky—States which have no connection whatever with the Confederate Government, do not pay any allegiance to it, but in their organized, official capacities, call out, arm and forward, forty to fifty thousand soldiers each, to war upon secession as upon a traitorous insurrection. No popular elections were ever held in Missouri or Kentucky to choose and send members of Congress to Richmond. No ballot was ever cast in either State for a member of the rebel Government. Not a man, claiming to be a Senator or a Representative at Richmond, from the States of Kentucky or Missouri, could go back to "his constituents" without the absolute certainty of being snatched up by his admiring fellow-citizens, and safely lodged in the cells of a prison. Yet men, claiming to be such Representatives and Senators from Kentucky and Missouri, continue to meet periodically at Richmond — participate in JEFF. DAVIS' Congress—help to levy taxes on the rest of the Confederates, and pass conscription bills, with an impudence that is amazing. Why do not the real, genuine "old original" Secessionists, who bear the burden and heat of the day, spue these Border State neophytes out of their Government? It does not look well—the bogus representatives of a non-existing constituency holding the highest seats in the synagogue of Secessiondom.

The unseemliest part of the exhibition is that these bogus borderers are ungenerous as well as impudent. They not only claim an interest in a Confederacy which their States do not allow, but they undertake to be high priests, holding the power to decide who is and who is not entitled to enjoy Confederate privileges.

One Mr. VEST, of Missouri, is quoted in the Richmond papers as having, on the first day of the rebel Congress, just met, offered a bill "providing for placing in the military service of the Confederate States all persons residing in the limits of the Confederacy claiming to be citizens of the State of Maryland, after the 1st of February." This is intended, of course, to punish Maryland for not having joined the rebellion when LEE invaded the State. But did Missouri join the Confederacy any more warmly and fixedly when PRICE invaded that State? The pot is calling the kettle black.

The debate on VEST'S bill brought out the general opinion of the rebel Congress that the fugitive Marylanders should do something to earn the beatitudes of the life they are leading in Dixie. Having gone South in search of their "rights," and found them, they should be taxed on them as on all other luxuries. This is rather a good thing on the Marylanders; but the suggestion is unique in its origin, coming from the representative of Missouri—a State that never elected VEST, that has chased all the Secessionists from its borders, and chosen a Legislature that is overwhelmingly for Union and Emancipation! The Marylanders in the Confederacy have not been smart. They should have gone into the Confederate House and Senate as members of Congress, as did VEST and his Missouri associates of a legislative turn of mind. They would have gained exemption thus from fighting.

Massachusetts Military Matters.

BOSTON, Tuesday, Jan. 20.

The statistics at the Adjutant-General's office show that Massachusetts has contributed for the war 58,214 three years' men, which, with the three and nine months' volunteers and 12,000 men furnished to the navy, makes a total of near 100,000 volunteers from this State.

An order has been introduced in the House, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, for the enrollment of all able-bodied white citizens of the Commonwealth, between 18 and 45, and for their proper organization, equipment, drill, &c.; also for instructing the boys in the high schools in military discipline, and establish a school for military science and classical instruction, to prepare young men for officers.

Massachusetts Money Matters.

BOSTON, Tuesday, Jan. 20.

The report of the Savings Banks, prepared in the State Department, shows the amount of deposits in these institutions on the 25th of October, 1862, to be a fraction less than $50,500,000, being nearly $6,000,000 more than in 1861.

The following is the weekly statement of the Boston Banks:

Capital Stock	$58,231,700
Loans and discounts	75,934,760
Specie	7,716 60
Due from other banks	13 727 7 9
Due to other banks	16,547,809
Deposits	25,382,140
Circulation	8,199,600

Miscellaneous War Items.

Messrs. JAS. B. EADS & Co. launched the gunboat Osage, at their works at Carondelet, near St. Louis, on Jan. 13. She is 160 feet long by 65 broad, with 4 feet depth of hold. The hull is sheathed with iron, and is divided into six water-tight compartments. She is built on the plan of the Wonder, with revolving turret, and will carry two 11-inch guns. She will draw only three and a half feet, with her armament.

It is stated that after the battle at Murfreesboro the Commissary Department was so deranged, and the supplies received in consequence so limited, that the men in ROSECRANS' army not only appropriated the scanty supplies of corn which were brought up for the horses, but actually carved to pieces the dead animals and regaled themselves with horse-steak.

The gunboat Carondelet, on her way to Island No. 10, when just above Fort Pillow, picked up a snag, which tore away her upper works, knocked down her jack-staff, broke her log-chains, and loosened her stanchions. She was towed up to the island by the Wilson. Two seamen were slightly injured.

Minnesota has just disposed of forty thousand acres of her school lands for about one quarter of a million dollars. There yet remain two and a-half millions to be sold.

The Parthenia, Trio and Charlotte were the names of the provision-boats burned by rebel cavalry, on the Cumberland River, on Jan 14.

WEALTH OF THE NATION.

Actual Increase of Wealth no Fallacy—The Increase of Buildings and of Farms—Of Crops—Historical Illustrations—Difference Between an Invaded and Invading Country.

THE BEECHES, Thursday, Jan. 1, 1863.

I am glad that my letter on "Wealth" has attracted some attention; for although our country furnishes the finest example of acquiring wealth, it has few sound economists. The City of New-York is remarkably prosperous, yet I know of no place in which a school of political economy might be set up to more advantage. In fact, it is doubtful whether either English or Americans have exhibited any remarkable skill in the science of economy. Notwithstanding all that is said about ADAM SMITH, (whose doctrine on labor is unquestionably true,) I suspect that the French and Italians have been the best writers on that subject. At any rate, we have arrived at a period when we ought to have a better treatise on the subject than any we have.

Your correspondent, "G. M.," thinks I have fallen into a "fallacy." I think not. But, as the subject is important, and the information upon it by no means common, I will restate his objections, and furnish some additional facts. He remarks, "The opinion he has thus expressed may be true. I hope it can be proved. But, at least it is contrary to all the views generally held on the subject." I know it is a common opinion that war must be per se destructive; and if we take all the parties to it, and the whole world, it certainly must be destructive, for there is a certain amount of wealth which might have existed and been put to good use, absolutely perished. But it does not follow that one of those parties may not be comparatively flourishing, and notwithstanding the loss of part of its income, be growing rich by the accumulation of the residue. This was my proposition. It has received several historical illustrations, contrary to the "views generally held." In one of the most splendid and instructive chapters of history (see MOTLEY'S United Netherlands, vol. 1, chap. 7) it is recorded that the Dutch, after twenty years' war with Spain, "continued to thrive and their resources to increase." Other examples may be found; but it must be self-evident that if one party, as is the case with the loyal States, suffer none of the ravages of war, and continue their production, which finds its way by an immense commerce into all markets, and borrows no money of foreign nations, that it not only may, but must increase in wealth, up to the point when the exhaustion of labor goes beyond the supply—and that is the true limit. NAPOLEON reached this when, after twenty years war with near all Europe, he undertook the invasion of Russia. Had the same number of able-bodied men existed in France in 1813 which were there ten years before, he would have recruited a new army and beaten the allies. France was exhausted.

In the case before us we must recollect that it is the South, not we, who are invaded. Nobody supposes that Virginia or Louisiana are growing richer. On the contrary, they are most melancholy examples of the destructive effects of war; and if the war were now to cease it must be many years before they recover from those effects. But, the loyal States have the same advantages in commerce and manufactures which Holland had in its contest with Spain; and, superadded, what Holland had not, an immense agriculture, whose surplus products are in demand throughout the earth. Let me give the general reader some facts, which, although local and particular, are remarkably significant. At this moment, the pork-packers of Cincinnati are cutting more hogs than was ever done in any year of that great provision market. The same is true of Chicago, and most other provision points in the West. In this very year, Ohio has raised the largest wheat crop she ever did, except one. The railroad which passes in sight of my window has increased its business fifty per cent. since the war. Its utmost power cannot carry off the freight-cars on its track. The farmers of the West have made as much molasses as was the whole produce of Louisiana. Keep the price of sugar up, and we shall raise our own sugar. Finally, the State of Ohio is called upon to pay twenty millions of dollars per annum to the National Government, and will do it without a complaint, and almost without being felt. Can a people do this who are not prosperous? Where were such evidences of wealth ever before furnished by any people?

But I am willing to take the matter seriatim, and will now answer what your correspondent considers my mistake. He says that I forget "that these very earnings are all the people have to live upon. Food and other necessaries have to be consumed."

Not at all. The amount of absolute loss by consumption is much less than is generally supposed. A farmer loses nothing by rent, fuel, and many minor articles, which do not enter into the Census. Hay is in the census; but where is the immense amount of pasturage, fodder, &c., &c.? Several years since, I examined that problem, by taking one of the interior counties of Ohio as my basis. I was satisfied that the county, which was a good one, and well cultivated, made more than ten per cent., net, on the whole capital of the county, after deducting the whole consumption of the people. I observe, also, that the cash increase of property in Ohio from 1850 to 1860 is twelve per cent. per annum on the whole valuation of 1850. The cash increase in New-York was seven per cent. The cash increase of Pennsylvania was nine per cent.; of Rhode Island, seven per cent.; of Kentucky, twelve per cent.; of Illinois forty-five per cent. The increase of the four great States of the Ohio Valley (Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Kentucky) was eighteen per cent. per annum. Now, this is a net increase of property, after the consumption is taken out, of existent tangible property. In regard to Ohio and Kentucky the proof is clear also, by a comparison of exports and imports, the exports of these States being immense. But there is a constant improvement in real property going on all the time, which adds greatly to the wealth of the country. In the year 1861-62 (a year of war be it observed,) Ohio made eight thousand new structures, of all sizes and values, from splendid churches to small barns—most of them farmers' dwelling-houses, of small size. Churches, school-houses, &c., &c., are not assessed, so that they do not appear in that value. Then there are bridges, fences, cleared lands, roads, plantations, besides new machinery, and great increase of animals—processes which are not perceptibly arrested by the war. I give these merely as examples of the manner in which wealth is increasing. If the census statistics be taken as correct (and they are not overrated,) the increase of the loyal States (leaving out the parts of Virginia and Tennessee in our possession,) was, from 1850 to 1860, six thousand-five hundred and eighty millions ($6,580,000,000) of dollars. The annual increase of these States was actually six hundred and fifty-eight millions. Taking the dead loss of the war at $450,000,000, (which is quite high enough,) as I estimated—then there is now an increase of $208,000,000 per annum. But the base of that increase was the census of 1850. We have now an increase of 35 per cent. in population and 100 per cent. in capital, as a new basis of calculation. The present annual increase in the loyal States, if we were at peace, is $1,100,000,000, and deducting the dead loss of $450,000,000, we are still increasing in wealth at the rate of $600,000,000 annually, and the demonstration, whether taken in detail or the aggregate, is as complete as it can be made. I know that the want of agricultural laborers may be felt next Summer; but I think not very severely. My conclusion is, that if the currency question can be so managed as to avoid all foreign loans, we can carry on the war with the South indefinitely, and grow rich all the while. I do not say that is a desirable end, but I say that it is far better than to give up one inch of territory or one particle of power. Your correspondent at New-Orleans says Slavery is dead and buried. If it be, the Valley of the Mississippi will be worth fourfold what was ever dreamed of. How do you suppose they count themselves rich now? Why, by two lines of a pen they assess one-third of their own people at $000 apiece. Now let New-York do that, and she will add one thousand millions of dollars to her assessed property! But would New-York be a dollar richer? Not a whit. Truly they have marvelous ideas of wealth down South, and we Northern people should be set down as first-rate blockheads, even to have believed one word of the trash which DE BOW and his fellow asses put forth as political economy.

A VETERAN OBSERVER.

OAKEY HALL ON HORACE GREELEY.

Mr. Greeley Denounced as a Jacobin, a Three-fingered Jack, a Harlot, and a Gorilla.

THE RADICALS' SIX DEGREES OF CRIME.

NINE CHEERS FOR JEFF. DAVIS.

MR. SEWARD CALLED A MAGNIFICENT LIAR.

A PLEA FOR CONCILIATION AND PEACE.

A. OAKEY HALL, Esq., District-Attorney of this City, delivered an address before the Democratic Union Association last evening, on "The Radicals." Though but a new convert to the political principles of the Society which he addressed, it is not at all improbable that the learned District-Attorney recognized, among his audience, many with whom his official duties have made him familiar.

The Hall of the Association, corner of Broadway and Twenty-second-street, which has been recently fitted up in commodious and neat style, was crowded—over a thousand persons being present.

On the platform were Hon. Judge MCCUNN, H. L. CLINTON, Esq., Gen. DURYEA, Hon. JOHN CALLAHAN, Prof. MASON, and others of note.

Hon. LUKE F. COZZENS, previous to the address, announced that owing to further repairs in the Hall, there would be no lecture next Tuesday evening. He then introduced the speaker of the evening, Hon. A. OAKEY HALL, who was received with applause.

SPEECH OF HON. A. OAKEY HALL.

MR. HALL commenced by thanking the audience for their reception of the theme. That theme, he said, could be properly stated. The political crimes against the national crisis committed by HORACE GREELEY and his Abolition Confederates. [Applause.] As DR. FORBES, when asked to write the history of Tony, said he could not do it, because it would take a thousand volumes, and he should not live long enough, so he could not attempt to do justice to his theme in one evening. [Laughter;] that justice would take a thousand hours. [Laughter and applause.] He would divide the crimes of this Jacobin GREELEY, as was expressed in a popular play at the Bowery Theatre the six degrees of crime. [Laughter.] He would leave out of the question that other play "Three Fingered Jack." [Laughter.] He would divide the time into three periods. The period of excitement, the period of war, which is now practically ended, and the period of consolation. [Roars of applause and cries of "Peace."] Not peace yet, for the time of peace would be the fourth period. He spoke of crime in its legal sense, and also of Confederates in the legal sense. These Jacobins of the North were trying to disunite the North, and when that was made apparent, and the mask fell off, it was his duty, as well as that of every good citizen, to act accordingly. The late Republican party had been shivered into Mosaic fragments by Abolitionism. [Applause.]

After considering Gov. SEYMOUR'S late message, Mr. HALL proceeded to quote from PARTON'S Life of Greeley, which he considered an autobiography. He quoted, amid great laughter, the record of Mr. GREELEY'S birth, when, the historian says, he was "black as a chimney;" of Mr. GREELEY'S feeling bad when a boy ashamed of him in school; how Mr. GREELEY carried off a gallon of rum when an execution was issued against his father's property; how Mr. GREELEY, when young, was in the habit of trying to yoke the ox first; how Mr. GREELEY was, when young, taken for an idiot. Mr. HALL intimated that Mr. GREELEY was a hypocrite on the subject of temperance and jobs, and that he tried to make everybody go out of the world as black as he came into it. [Laughter.] But, who were GREELEY'S confederates? He could not name them in one evening either. [Laughter.] They were named in the book of Prince GORONSKI, [laughter] and passages from that book would be printed in his address.

Mr. HALL here incidentally spoke of MCCLELLAN as the WASHINGTON of modern times. [Applause.]

Mr. HALL thought it was too bad that so many people read the Tribune and did not read anything else; that too many people regarded that paper as their prayer-book. But, he thought the time would come when Mr. GREELEY would be unmasked. As we now wonder how such a man as Lord GEORGE GORDON could have followers, so would men fifty years hence wonder that such a man as HORACE GREELEY could have followers. He would classify the crimes of HORACE GREELEY as follows: First, the partisan prejudice crime; second, the reckless invasion crime; third, the civico military crime; fourth, the abolition crime; fifth, the financial crime; and sixth, the foreign mediation crime.

Mr. HALL claimed that GREELEY & Co. at the North, did, before secession, the same work at the North that RHETT & Co. did at the South; that they were sounding party cries at a time when they should have been working with the great conservative parties; that Mr. GREELEY was at the Union-square meeting smiling his ghastly abolition smile; and Mr. GREELEY knew just under which thimble the little abolition joker lay. [Applause and laughter.] They did not first establish a guillotine, but they had tried to establish a reign of terror. Would they have permitted such a meeting as this to be held a year ago? [CRIES—"No, no."] Instead of helping their brother soldiers, they were helping their brothers who had their hands in their pockets, and only waited to have their elbows in the National Treasury. [Laughter.] HORACE GREELEY and his confederates cried "Union" when they meant plunder. [Laughter.] They had tried to defeat ODELL in Brooklyn, in order to sustain the Abolition nominee, and had tried to stigmatize as a traitor that eminent jurist and friend of the Union, Judge DALY.

Mr. HALL asked, with the Albany Evening Journal, how many men would have attended the Union-square meeting, or have volunteered for the army if it had been announced that it was to be a war for the abolition of Slavery? [Voices, "None," "None."]

Mr. HALL, at this point, alluded to the presence of Gen. DURYEA, who was received with applause, after which Mr. HALL told a story about some boys who got a skunk cornered in its den; but, instead of leaving it there to odorize itself to death, let it out to have a little fun, and got odorized themselves. He compared the Abolitionists to the boys, and said the former let out secession and got Bull Run as a consequence. [Laughter.] Mr. HALL denounced the civico-military crimes of Mr. GREELEY and his associates in putting civilians in the army over the heads of educated military men, and in this connection condemned the appointment of Gen. HALLECK, who never saw a battle, to be Commander-in-Chief, and of a lawyer (Mr. STANTON) at the head of the War Department. He also disapproved the action of Gen. HITCHCOCK, as developed in the evidence before the McDowell Court of Inquiry—remarking that Gen. HITCHCOCK seemed to be at the head of an abolition crusade to embarrass the operations of McCLELLAN. He thought that Gen. MCCLELLAN should have served the Congressmen as NAPOLEON served the French Commissioners, and thus have put an end to this civico-military interference. Mr. HALL inculpated the President in these civico-military crimes, and asked how, under such circumstances, we could expect to succeed—and succeed against JEFFERSON DAVIS. [Applause and hisses, the applause predominating.] Some people would say, Say nothing about JEFF. DAVIS; [applause;] but he would say something about JEFF. DAVIS. [Applause, and a voice—"Where's KENNEDY?"] Mr. HALL then detailed the military education and experience of JEFF. DAVIS, and asked how, in this contest, did Mr. LINCOLN appear, with his "my man?" [Great laughter.] Which would win in a race, a full-blooded horse, driven by a stable boy, or a "worser horse," driven by HIRAM WOODRUFF? [Voice—"HIRAM."] Mr. HALL thought so, too, and he believed that even GREELEY had called JEFF. DAVIS a Hiram. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALL characterized Mr. GREELEY and his associates as the Abolition harlots of the country. [Laughter.] These harlots, he said, had approached FREMONT and HUNTER, and obtained the issue of their proclamations, and at last approached the virtuous LINCOLN. [Laughter.] All he would say about the emancipation proclamation would be to give a dialogue said to have occurred at Richmond between two slaves.

SAMBO.—"POMPEY, we be free after de fust January."

POMPEY.—"Who say dat?"

SAMBO.—"MASS' LINCOLN."

POMPEY.—"Den I'spars to me dat 'pends upon Massa LEE more dan pon MASSA LINCOLN." [Laughter.]

Mr. HALL made a humorous contrast between the Southern guerrilla and the Northern guerrilla—the Abolitionists coming under the latter head. After paying a high compliment to the literary ability of Mr BEECHER, Mr. HALL intimated that Mr. BEECHER was a gorilla, and, in support of that view, quoted from the Independent an article by Mr. BEECHER, ending with—"God and the negro alone can save the Republic." [Hisses and laughter.] For himself, he would rather that the white race of the North should be subjugated by the South, than that we should owe our salvation to the negro. [Great applause, and three cheers for the sentiment.]

Mr. HALL reviewed HON. THADDEUS STEVENS' bill for the arming of the negroes, amid much laughter and applause. He brought down strong denunciations upon the plan, saying that such a force would be discharged by the Government succeeding Mr. LINCOLN—[applause]—that Gen. DURYEA did not leave the service too soon; that he would like to see the white man who would dare to take office in such a force. Mr. HALL ridiculed the probable spectacle of negro infantry, artillery and cavalry.

Mr. HALL next considered what he called the financial crime of HORACE GREELEY and his confederates. He said that Mr. CHASE was like MICAWBER, simply waiting for something to turn up; that he had no financial plans; that it was a strange currency which was worth—a part of it—100 cents on the dollar, and another part 130 cents on the dollar.

Mr. HALL here read an original piece of doggrel, with a refrain unfit for publication—humorously hitting off the points of our financial muddle.

Mr. HALL next considered the foreign mediation crime, and urged that Mr. GREELEY hated Mr. SEWARD because Mr. SEWARD hated foreign mediation. Mr. HALL wanted to see the conciliation and peace movements which were to be inaugurated and carried on, to be begun here and here alone. Mr. SEWARD had kept foreign Governments at bay by doing the most magnificent lying ever known in the history of diplomacy.

Mr. HALL closed his address, which had lasted over two hours, with a strong appeal for the triumph of conservatism and the overthrow of Abolitionism.

There was loud calls for DURYEA, but it was announced that Gen. DURYEA had left the hall. After an announcement that the next lecture would take place at the same place a week from next Tuesday, the meeting adjourned at 10¼ P. M.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE LEGISLATURE.

SENATE.

ALBANY, Tuesday, Jan. 20.

Mr. FOLGER, from the Judiciary Committee, reported a number of bills, to alter existing laws, adversely; among others, those making certain agreements void except made in writing; defining the duties of executors and administrators relative to forfeited recognizances in New-York. The Committee has already over seventy bills, amending existing laws, in its hands.

Mr. RAMSEY introduced a bill to grant State aid to the Albany and Susquehannah Railroad. It gives $500,000, one-half on the completion of forty miles, and the other half on the completion of eighty miles of the road.

On motion of Mr. MONROE, a resolution was adopted requesting the Judiciary Committee to prepare a general bill legalizing town bounties to volunteers

The State Debt.

NO PREMIUMS ON COIN—COMMUNICATION FROM THE COMPTROLLER.

STATE OF NEW-YORK, COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, ALBANY, Jan. 17, 1863.

To the President of the Senate:

SIR: I have received from the Senate the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Comptroller be respectfully requested to inform the Senate, at his earliest convenience, the aggregate sum paid during the last year in premiums on coin, to pay interest or principal of the public debt of this State, and whether, in making such payments in coin, any distinction was made among the holders of State Stock, Comptroller's Bonds, or other evidences of State indebtedness; and if such distinction was made, the reason for it, and also the authority of law under which such purchases of coin were made. Also, in what funds was the interest on the Comptroller's Bonds paid, and the $560,000 State Stock, redeemed the past year, known as the Astor Stock.

In compliance with the request contained in the foregoing resolution, I have the honor to inform the Senate that no sum whatever has been paid out of the Treasury, for premiums on coin. The payments made in January and April, 1862, were made by the Manhattan Company, from the specie and specie funds deposited with it before the suspension of specie payments by the banks.

For the payment of interest due in June, and for subsequent interest, the deposit banks were requested to contribute in coin a certain percentage of the amounts deposited with them before the suspension, upon the condition that all of them should so contribute. All of them, fifty-four in number, promptly complied with this request for the June payments, with the exception of the Bank of Havana, in Schuyler County, and the Susquehanna Valley Bank, at Binghamton.

These banks having declined, and the premium having risen rapidly, it was found impossible to procure the coin for the subsequent payments without purchasing it. But as the Legislature has made no appropriation for that purpose, no premium could be paid from the State Treasury. The Manhattan Company, however, in order to protect the credit of the State, offered to make the purchase, upon its own responsibility, to the extent necessary for the payment of the interest upon the funded debt of the State, and take upon itself the risk of the requisite appropriation being made by the Legislature. With the concurrence and advice of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, and of the Comptroller, it has made such purchases. The aggregate sum paid for the premiums upon the coin thus purchased, as appears by the account rendered by the Manhattan Company was, for Canal Stocks, $229,433 27; for General Fund Stocks, $22,ost 63.

I am not aware of any express authority of law which either empowers or forbids the Manhattan Company to make such purchases if it chooses to do so.

The current expenses of the State, and the Comptroller's revenue bonds issued in anticipation of the tax levied by the act of April 16, 1861, for the purpose of raising troops to be mustered into the service of the United States, were paid in the same description of funds which were received for the taxes and tolls due to the State.

The reason why the Manhattan Company was advised to pay the interest on the funded debt in coin was because such was the practice of the United States, of Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, and such had always been the practice of New-York, and it was believed that the credit, the interest and the honor of the State required it. The reason why the current expenses, ordinary indebtedness, and revenue bonds, were paid in such funds as were received, was because there were no other funds with which they could be paid.

There was no sum known as the Astor stock redeemed during the past year. During the present month Mr. ASTOR has transferred to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, $450,221 28, and they have paid him that amount for it by check upon the Manhattan Company. It is presumed that this payment is the one intended to be inquired into by the resolution.

Respectfully yours,

L. ROBINSON, Comptroller.

DEAFNESS

NOISES IN THE HEAD,
Diseases of the Eye, Ear & Throat,
CATARRH CURED
BY
DR. VON EISENBERG.
READ.
INSTANTANEOUS CURE OF DEAFNESS.

We have much pleasure in placing the following testimonial before our readers. It illustrates the unrivaled skill of Dr. Von Eisenberg, as it is from a most reliable source:

NEW-YORK, Aug. 5, 1862.

I have great pleasure to testify to the skill of Dr Von Eisenberg. I went into his office completely deaf, and came out with perfect hearing. I think Dr Von Eisenberg one of the cleverest oculists and aurists in the world. The operation, which lasted two or three minutes on each of my ears, gave me no pain whatsoever.

SAMUEL C. HUNT,
No. 5 Meserole-av., Greenpoint, L. I.

NEW-YORK, July 19, 1862.

This certifies that my mother has been for some time afflicted with partial deafness, suffering from pain, and rumbling noises in the head, together with other indications of a total loss of hearing. Dr Von Eisenberg removed from her ears a great quantity of matter, together with coagulated blood, relieving her instantaneously, and all without pain. It is with grateful thanks that I give this testimony to his skill.

CAROLINE J. POST, No. 28 South-st.

NEW-YORK, June 10, 1862.

I have been for many years afflicted with deafness, accompanied by a roaring noise in my head, for the treatment of which I placed myself under the care of Dr Von Eisenberg, and am happy to say that in this case the Doctor has shown that skill and knowledge which has placed him at the head of his profession. I do, therefore, with the utmost confidence recommend any one afflicted with deafness to place themselves under his care.

HENRY BROWNING, No. 271 West 34th-st.

NEW-YORK, Feb. 22, 1862, 126 EAST 10TH-ST.

J. E. Von Eisenberg, M. D.—DEAR DOCTOR: I write to express my thanks to you for the great benefit my little daughter has derived at your hands. She came to you a most blind, not able to bear light. You pronounced the disease to be Granular Inflammation of the purulent form, with great Photophobia. After one week's treatment she now sees well, and she is very nearly cured. Accept my thanks for the great skill you have displayed, and I shall be happy to show her to any one who may call on me, hoping thereby to be of service to others similarly afflicted, and also to yourself.

Yours, truly,
MRS. HOPKINS.

THE CANADA OIL WELLS.—The question most eagerly asked of persons just come from Enniskillen is generally the all-important one of whether the wells are holding out or not. It is a fact that many of the flowing wells have ceased to flow; and others, while still continuing to flow, do no longer yield the immense quantities that they did at first. But, then, there remains yet untouched a large area of what there is every reason to believe to be good productive oil territory. The work of drilling and sinking wells is still vigorously carried on, and a rise in the price of crude oil to $1 or $2 per barrel would set the drills agoing at a rate hitherto unheard of. The owners of wells which have ceased to flow do not think it worth while to drill down any further until a more remunerative demand arises for crude oil. When this takes place, every effort will be made, both by drilling further and pumping, to bring the oil up, if there is any to bring. The question whether former flowing wells will yield oil by pumping, has yet to be determined.

Oil Springs is certainly the busiest place of its size to be seen; in fact, a perfect hive of industry, full of life and motion. The population of the whole diggings is estimated at 2,000 or more. There are still more people than can find house-room to live in, and rents are of tip-top height. Landlords of house appear to have taken "Excelsior" for their motto. Think of six dollars a month for the up-stairs, merely, of a frame house about 18 by 24, and three or four competitors for it at that. People continue to come in faster than houses can be built for them. The hotels and boarding-houses are crowded, and the unfortunate inmates are fairly lost for want of a place to go to in the evening, and even for seats to sit upon after supper-time. A good reading-room is the great want of the place; and I am astonished that such an institution has not yet been established. Whoever may have the enterprise to start something of the kind, will be sure to do well by the operation.—Correspondence of the Toronto Globe.

THE SKATING CATASTROPHE A HOAX.—The Elmira Advertiser says "The report sent over the telegraph wires, and published in all the papers, of the death by drowning of twenty-seven persons at Harpersville, Broome county, a day or two since, turns out to be a cruel hoax. The person guilty of the meanness of perpetrating it should be ducked in a horse pond until he is nearly or quite drowned, and never allowed the pleasure of skating again in his life."

SECOND EDITION.

WEDNESDAY, ONE O'CLOCK, P. M.

FIRE ON SHIPBOARD—$30,000 WORTH OF KEROSENE OIL BURNED—THE VESSEL ENTIRELY CONSUMED.—The prize schooner Sarah Starr, captured about a year since, laden with turpentine, and trying to run the blockade, was entirely consumed last evening about 6 o'clock, together with 1,500 barrels of kerosene oil, valued at $30,000. When brought to this port the schooner was bonded by the Government, the owners taking her and paying over her assessed value. She had just been laden with a cargo of kerosene oil, and was about ready to sail when she took fire. She was owned by —— MUNN, a Liverpool merchant, resident in this City, and is a total loss. No particulars could be gleaned last evening relative to her insurances.

Below.

Ship American Union, Liverpool 55 ds. The Captain of the American Union states that he has had continued westerly gales the entire passage. Dec. 17, lat. 46 40 N., lon. 37, spoke the bark Carolina, from Quebec, bound E. Dec. 29, spoke brig James fm. Charlottetown, Prince Edward's Island, bound to Liverpool loaded with oats, with loss of topmast head, in a gale, a few days previous. Asked what they wanted. They said a sail. Told them they could have the boat if they sent men to take her back when they got there. The crew refused to take it on board, saying it was no use, as they could never get the vessel home, and wanted to be taken on board the ship. We took them on board. The night being moderate we lay by her till morning, and sent the mate on board to examine her. He found the vessel tight with the cargo somewhat shifted. My mate wishing to go on board of her, and some of my men volunteering, I let him go, and gave him a sailboat, &c. He bore away for Liverpool or Queenstown. On the 30th, had a heavy gale from the westward. A sea struck us, and knocked off the fore channel, also taking about thirty feet of plank shear clean out from the bulwarks.

NATURE'S REMEDY.

Of the thousand compounds presented to the public during the past forty years, it is safe to affirm that none of them can in truth be compared with the

for uniformly good results! In a retrospective view of an extensive practice of near half a century, in which thousands have been cured, it is difficult to find a single case of "gonorrhea" that has not been extirpated promptly by the INFALLIBLE.

Remedies in use for the cure of this disease almost invariable produce "stricture," which is a hundred fold worse than the original infirmity!

Young men, do not patronize quack doctors or quack medicines! Avoid them as you would life-long suffering. Take the INFALLIBLE only, follow the instructions, and a cure is certain, with no injurious effects.

Sold by H. C. OAKLEY, No. 11 Park-row, opposite the Astor House; and S. CAMPBELL, corner 8th and 28th-sts. Price $1 50 per jar. Sent by express on receipt of price. Address Sole Agent for the United States.

SURE CURE—BY DR. POWERS, SUCCESSfully consulted with Dr. WARD, No. 12 Laight-st. Conducted on the plan of the Hospital des Venériens, Paris, where those afflicted with any form of private disease can receive prompt treatment, without risk or exposure, viz.: Syphilis, gonorrhœa, gleet, strictures, ulcers, tumors, cancers, secondary and constitutional syphilis, diseases of the kidneys, &c., &c. Thirty years of extensive practice, exclusively devoted to the treatment of those complaints unable to effect cures in cases where others of less experience have failed. Dr. Powers' Essence of Life restores the vigor of youth in four weeks. This marvelous agent restores manhood to the most shattered constitutions—physical disqualifications, impediments to marriage, thereby speedily cured. The men to consult, Drs. Ward and Powers, the champions and kings of venereal diseases, possessing the most certain, speedy and most effectual remedies in the world, guarantee a perfect cure, or no charge, in from one to three days. Established in 1840. N. B.—Those who have used their preventives are never without. Send for a circular. To Ladies.—Dr. Powers' Periodical Drops are a safe and certain remedy for monthly irregularities. The above remedies sent by mail. The afflicted should read their circular. Postage free, on receipt of a three-cent stamp

PRIVATE DISEASES CURED IN THE shortest possible time, by DR. WARD & CO., No. 12 Laight-st., near Canal, without the use of Mercury, loss of time or change of diet. Dr. WARD, from the hospitals of London, Paris and Edinburgh, is the discoverer of the only certain and reliable remedies for diseases of a private character. In 28 years' practice he has cured more cases of Secret Diseases and Wrong Treatment than all others combined. I can and will cure you in less time and expense than any one can or will, and those who have been robbed of their money and health, call; it will take but little money and time to restore you. If you have been unfortunate, call at once. By his special experience in this much-neglected branch of medical science, he is enabled to guarantee a cure in the most complicated cases. Recent cases of Gonorrhœa or Syphilis cured in a few days, without change of diet or hindrance from business. Secondary Syphilis—the last vestige eradicated without the use of Mercury. Involuntary emissions stopped in a short time. Sufferers from impotency, or loss of sexual power, restored to full vigor in a few weeks. Permanently and speedily cured by a new treatment. Persons at a distance, failing to receive prompt treatment elsewhere, may get a permanent cure effected by writing a full diagnosis of their case, addressed to DR. WARD & CO., No. 12 Laight-st., the only place.

DR. COBBETT, MEMBER OF THE N. Y. University, (Medical College,) and Royal College of Surgeons, London, has removed from No. 19 Duane-st. to his present very convenient suite of offices at No. 27 Centre-st., between Chambers and Reade sts., with a private entrance at No. 6 City Hall-place, where he can be consulted with the most honorable confidence on all diseases affecting the urinary organs; thirty years in his present specialty, (three of which have been at the Hospitals of this City,) enable him to guarantee a cure in every case undertaken, or make no charge. Strictures of the urethra, impotency, seminal weaknesses, &c., treated on the most scientific principles. N. B.—As a proof of Dr. C.'s qualifications, he would call special attention to his Diplomas, which can be seen in his office.

DR. COOPER, NO. 14 DUANE-ST., MAY BE confidently consulted on all diseases of a private nature. A practice of 30 years, devoted to the treatment and cure of Syphilitic, Mercurial and Diseases of a delicate nature, enables Dr. C. to make speedy and permanent cures, no matter of how long standing the case may be. Strictures of the urethra and seminal weakness, brought on by a secret habit, effectually cured. The victims of misplaced confidence, who have been misled by quack advertisements, can call on Dr. C. with the certainty of being radically cured. N. B.—As a qualified physician and surgeon, and a member of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of New-York. Office hours from 8 A. M. to 9 P. M.

A PHYSIOLOGICAL VIEW OF MARRIAGE—Containing nearly 300 pages and 150 fine plates and engravings of the anatomy of the sexual organs, in a state of health and disease, with a treatise on self-abuse, its deplorable consequences upon the mind and body, with the author's plan of treatment—the only rational and successful mode of cure, as shown by the report of cases treated. A truthful adviser to the married and those contemplating marriage, who entertain doubts of their physical condition. Sent free of postage to any address on receipt of 25 cents, in specie or postage-stamps. Address Dr. LA CROIX, No. 31 Maiden-lane, Albany, N. Y.

IMPORTANT TO THE MARRIED AND those about to be married.—Dr. A. M. MAURICEAU, Professor of Diseases of Women, has just published the 160th edition of the valuable book, entitled "THE MARRIED WOMAN'S PRIVATE MEDICAL COMPANION," strictly intended for those whose health or circumstances forbid a too rapid increase of family. Price $1. Sold at his office, No. 129 Liberty-st., New-York; or can be sent by mail, free of postage to any part of the United States and Canada, by inclosing $1, and addressing Box No. 1,224 New-York City. For sale by RICHARDSON, at No. 1 Vesey-st., (Astor House,) and No. 18 Ann-st.; FEDERHEN & CO., 13 Court-st., Boston.

DON'T BE A FOOL!—PAY NO MORE MONEY to Advertising Quacks, but go to a respectable place and buy a standard work. Trall & Jackson's PATHOLOGY OF THE REPRODUCTIVE ORGANS, which contains FULL DIRECTIONS for the PASTING CURE of EVERY kind of sexual disease or weakness. $3. Sold in New-York City, by O. S. FELT, No. 36 Walker-st., and also by Sinclair Tousey and Henry Dexter, and all enterprising booksellers.

SOMETHING FOR EVERY LADY.—DR. WARD'S Great Female Benefactor or Golden Regulating Pills, infallible in correcting, regulating and removing all obstructions, from whatever cause, designed for purely legitimate purposes—to restore the menstrual fluid—and they will never disappoint the anxious patient. Office, No. 12 Laight-st., where Dr. WARD can be consulted, confidentially, day and evening.

DR. HUNTER'S RED DROP RESTORES the vigor of youth in four days. Restores manhood to the most shattered system. No. 3 Division-st., New-York, the only place. Beware of bogus Dr. Hunters. The City Hall Dr. Hunter is on every trick to rob Dr. HUNTER of his great reputation as a skilful and reliable physician. He has no other office but No 3 Division-st. Established in 1834.

WATTS' NERVOUS ANTIDOTE.—THIS celebrated medicine, prepared by Dr. J. F. Stratton, will be supplied to the trade by F. C. WELLS & CO., General Agents, No. 115 Franklin-st., New-York.

DR. RALPH, AUTHOR OF THE "PRIVATE TREATISE," &c., No. 131 Bleecker-st., west of Broadway. Those who apply in the earlier stages will be surprised at the ease and rapidity of the cure.

Lessee and Manager.....Wm. WHEATLEY

It affords Mr. Wheatley much gratification to be able to announce

A PURE AND GENUINE SUCCESS OF THE GREAT TRAGIC ARTISTE,
Miss BATEMAN,
who will make her second appearance at this theatre on WEDNESDAY EVENING, Jan. 21, 1863, in the new five act play of singular and beautiful interest, entitled
LEAH, THE FORSAKEN,
Arranged from the German of Mosenthal expressly for Miss BATEMAN.
She will be supported as previously by Mr. JAMES W. WALLACK, Jr.,
AND
Mr. EDWIN ADAMS,
and a company of artistes expressly selected with a view to their fitness for the characters to be represented. This Drama, which has become one of the classics of the German stage, has been recently added to the repertoire of Ristori, but will not be produced by that artiste in either Paris or London until the coming Spring. Therefore the public of New-York will enjoy a priority of representation in that play over both the French and English capitals. It will be produced with NEW AND BEAUTIFUL SCENERY by Mr. J. H. SELWYN.
ENTIRELY ORIGINAL MUSIC, composed by Mr. ROBERT STOEPEL.
Musical Director.....Mr. HARVEY B. DODWORTH.
NEW AND CHARACTERISTIC COSTUMES AND APPOINTMENTS,
By Mons. PHILLIPE AND Mr. S. WALLIS.

DR. MACGOWAN'S ILLUSTRATED LECTURES ON JAPAN—TO-MORROW (Wednesday) at 3 P. M., in Dodworth's Hall, No. 806 Broadway.

Also, in the Brooklyn Athenæum, on THURSDAY, 8 P. M., under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association, in compliance with the subjoined invitation:

Dr. J. Macgowan, M. D.:

Dear Sir: We, the subscribers, unite in requesting you to deliver in Brooklyn, the lectures on China and Japan, which were received with extraordinary favor in different parts of Great Britain and France, and which you have began to repeat in New-York.

Knowing something of the great amount and variety of interesting and valuable information which you assiduously and laboriously collected, during your residence and travels in the East for more than twenty years, and of your ability to impart instruction with the aid of your large and unique collection of curiosities, we wish our fellow-citizens to share in advantages offered by your return to your native country, whose dignity, honor and rights you so patriotically and ably vindicated in England against the enemies of our Union, prosperity and power.

Very truly yours.

Signed by many influential citizens of Brooklyn.

THE VICTORY IN ARKANSAS

Further Particulars of the Action.

THE MAIN FORT CASEMATED

Terrible Effects of Our Heavy Shot.

CAIRO, Saturday, Jan. 18.

The Memphis Bulletin of Wednesday has the following, derived from parties arrived at Memphis from Arkansas Post on the dispatch-boat Kellogg:

"On Saturday, the main portion of the army, with the iron-clad gunboats Louisville, Cincinnati and Mound City, and three light-draft vessels, having entered the Arkansas River from a branch of the White River, approached a fort forty miles above the mouth of the Arkansas, known as Arkansas Post. The place is situated at a favorable location for defence, on a bend of the river, of irregular, horse-shoe shape. It has for some months been much boasted of by the Confederates as a spot so fortified as to be extremely formidable.

At a point a mile below the fort, where persons in the fort were unable to see what was done, the troops were disembarked. The gunboats proceeded up the river, taking positions above the fort as well as below, so as to be able to rake it with heavy pieces. The land force meantime arrived in the rear.

The division under Gen. SHERMAN found, on proceeding back some distance, that a bayou hindered progress in the way he desired to advance, and he returned and chose a route more favorable for the intended operations. Another division, meantime, took up its march somewhat nearer the locality of the fort and escaped the obstruction of the bayou. Other obstructions existed, however, in the shape of rifle-pits, which it became necessary to flank by advancing to the furthest extremity from the river. This was not done without considerable skirmishing, which consumed the remainder of Saturday. There was some loss in these proceedings, and about sixty of the enemy, most of whom wandered into the Federal lines by mistake, were taken prisoners. It was nearly dark before the Federal forces had so far advanced as to have the fort in full view, ready for storming next morning.

While these operations were proceeding on land, the gunboats had taken positions, and a little before dark a smart artillery fight took place, which the early closing in of darkness cut short. The first shell fired by the enemy struck Lieut. HUNDRED, of the Thirteenth Illinois, and shattered his leg.

The next morning (Sunday) the land forces found that the enemy, having lost their rifle pits, had thrown up new intrenchments. These they proceeded to attack; also, to secure a position above the fort as well as below. The ground in the rear of the fort was found, as they advanced, divested of timber, except in a particular portion, where it was useful for cover, and prostrate trees and brush were so disposed as to present the greatest possible amount of obstruction. As the two sections of the attacking land forces advanced, they narrowed the distance between them more and more, approaching the position of surrounding the fort.

A re-inforcement of 2,000 men arrived to the rebels from St. Charles, on the White River, 25 miles distant by land. It was with difficulty that this force made a junction with the attacked body. They succeeded, however, by taking advantage of the shelter afforded by a ravine.

Meantime, the casual firing of artillery from the gunboats, and in reply, partially suspended by the necessity of supporting the land operations, grew more vigorous, and at 1 o'clock heavy firing commenced between the fort and the gunboats, sustained for three and a half hours so incessantly that there were only occasional and minute intervals at which the strained ear for a second was relieved from the thundering roar which told that blood was throbbing impetuously in maddened veins, and that every nerve was strained to seize the victory.

The casemating of the fort presented a formidable appearance, which seemed to some extent to justify the boasting that has been made of its impenetrability —a thickness of three feet of solid timber, covered with railroad iron, the whole looking as if it could resist the utmost force of cannon balls. To the great dismay of the defenders of the Post of Arkansas, the iron hail from our monstrous guns shattered their most formidable defences, penetrating and demolishing the stronghold they had reared with so much skill. The battered rails of iron came toppling down, and strong ribs of timber flew with fatal effect among the ranks they should have saved. The dismounted guns fell into the common ruin, proving the dreadful power of the gunboats and their mighty armaments, when manned by stout hearts and used with stern determination.

The second shot fired by the Federals, at the commencement of the fearful contest of three hours and a half, penetrated a casemate of the fort, and killed seven men relying upon it for defence. By another shot one of the enemy's caissons was exploded, causing the death of six men and nine horses.

With their casemates demolished, their defences exposed, raked by a fire of violence never surpassed, and a storming party closing in upon their rear, but one course was open to the defenders of the Post of Arkansas. They had fought bravely, but their enemy was unconquerable, even by their strongest resources, and was necessarily yielded to as victor, after the loss of about 200 men, killed, wounded and missing, and a somewhat heavier loss on the part of the attacking party. The commander of the Post, Gen. CHURCHILL, surrendered at 4½ o'clock in the afternoon. Gen. MCCLERNAND took the whole command—about 4,800 men—prisoners, 1,500 or 1,400 of whom are on the sick list.

The gunboats, which had inflicted so much damage, themselves escaped without serious injury,

Prisoners declared that, if our arrival had been postponed another day, they should have given a much stiffer fight, as large reinforcements would have joined them. In reply to questions as to the number of men and the state of the fortifications at Pine Bluff, Little Rock and points on the White River, they advised the interrogators to go count and observe for themselves, as their own statements might be doubted. They were sent up the river, starting on Monday, and will probably be here (Memphis) to-day.

It is thought probable that St. Charles, on the White River, will be the next point reduced, then Pine Bluffs and finally Little Rock.

In addition to the above, I have seen a slip from the Memphis Enquirer, which says that two regiments of rebels arrived at the fort the morning after the surrender, and entered with flags flying and drums beating, supposing it still to be held by the rebels. They were captured, of course, swelling the list of prisoners to something above 5,000.

The Missouri Legislature.

A MEMORIAL TO THE PRESIDENT.

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., Tuesday, Jan. 20.

Eighty-four members of the Legislature met to-night, and adopted a memorial to President LINCOLN, setting forth that there is still underlying the surface of the State a very large substratum of treasonable sentiment, which may break out on the first favorable opportunity, expressing thankfulness to the Government for assistance rendered, and stating the belief that by all truly loyal men in Missouri, their lives, property, and Constitutional liberty are now enjoyed; representing that utter ruin would result from another struggle with domestic traitors and their orders and abettors in our midst, urging the President to use his utmost caution in rescinding or modifying orders that have imperious or coercive influences only on our and the country's enemies. In many parts of the State the civil law is to a great extent powerless. Grand juries cannot be empanneled who will indict men who have stolen horses and [illegible] from the Unionists to equip themselves for the rebel army. It is still in some places safer to be disloyal than unconditionally Union. The moral force of coercion is not altogether on our side yet. We therefore urge the propriety of keeping in force Orders Nos. 3 and 35, emanating from Headquarters, Department of Missouri, until such times as we can say the thoroughly loyal sentiment prevails throughout the State. We ask this, believing that upon it largely depends the welfare of the Union, the cause of our State and the personal safety of thousands of citizens who have taken part in sustaining the Government.

The memorial was unanimously signed, and will be circulated for more names to-morrow. Col. HAYNARD has been appointed to present the memorial to the President.

THE PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Jan. 20.

Mr. SUMNER, of Massachusetts, (Rep.,) presented a memorial from the citizens of New-York, asking for the establishment of a reliable camp hospital and ambulance corps for the army.

Mr. TRUMBULL, of Illinois, (Rep.,) presented a petition in favor of a general bankrupt law.

Mr. SUMNER, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill to pay the French spoliation claims.

Mr. HALE, of New-Hampshire, (Rep.,) from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back the bill to authorize letters of marque and reprisal, with certain amendments, and said he should call it up at an early day.

Mr. WILSON, of Massachusetts, (Rep.,) introduced a bill for the prompt and uniform administration of military justice, and the better government of the military forces of the United States.

On motion of Mr. TRUMBULL, the bill to alter the Judicial Districts of the United States, placing Michigan and Ohio in the Seventh District, was taken up and passed.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky, (Union,) called up the bill authorizing the President to negotiate treaties with certain Indian tribes. Passed.

Mr. TRUMBULL moved to take up the bill to reorganize the Court of Claims.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio, (Rep.,) hoped that no bill of this general character would be taken up while so many important measures were pending. There was the bill concerning the discharge of State prisoners. Unless something was done on that subject we should have collisions between the States and the Government. There were important financial measures and bills from the Military Committee. He desired to impress on the Senate the necessity of acting on these important measures. We had now almost civil war in two States of the Union. He would move to take up no bill of this kind until a conscription law was passed, the financial measures disposed of, and some bill passed so that disloyal citizens could be arrested according to law. It could possibly make no difference whether the Court of Claims had three Judges or five.

The motion to take up the bill was agreed to—yeas 23, nays 13; and several amendments to it were adopted.

At the expiration of the morning hour the Chair called up the special order—the bill for the discharge of State prisoners.

Mr. TRUMBULL moved to postpone the special order.

Mr. DOOLITTLE, of Wisconsin, (Rep.,) said his colleague in the House was absent on business, having some bearing, perhaps, on this very bill relative to arrests. There had been a decision by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin that certain persons arrested for interfering with the draft be discharged. By an arrangement all proceedings were temporarily suspended. Thus it was of the utmost consequence that this question should be disposed of. There was a difference of opinion as to this authority for making arrests; and it was proper and necessary that legislation should settle the question.

The resolution to postpone was agreed to—yeas 23, nays 13.

Mr. HALE, of New-Hampshire, (Rep.,) moved to strike out the clause providing for two additional Judges.

Mr. SUMNER, of Massachusetts, (Rep.,) moved to amend so as to increase the number of Judges by one, making four. Rejected.

The question then recurring on the motion to strike out the provision for two additional Judges, it was rejected—Yeas 16, Nays 19.

Mr. GRIMES, of Iowa, (Rep.,) moved to strike out the whole bill after the enacting clause, and to insert a substitute repealing the original bill establishing the Court.

Mr. FOSTER, of Connecticut, (Rep.,) moved to lay the bill upon the table.

On the vote being taken on the motion, no quorum was present.

Mr. HALE moved to adjourn. Rejected—Yeas 5, Nays 29; still no quorum voting.

Mr. CLARK, of New-Hampshire, (Rep.,) moved that the Sergeant-at-Arms request the attendance of absent members. Agreed to.

Mr. COLLAMER, of Vermont, (Rep.,) protested against being obliged to sit and wait, doing nothing, while the Sergeant-at-Arms searched out absentees. He moved to adjourn. His motion was carried, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Jan. 20.

The Speaker stated that the question pending was on referring the President's Message, in connection with his approval of the $100,000,000 Treasury note bill to the Select Committee of five Representatives and four Senators.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, (Rep.,) supposed it to be due to the President and Secretary of the Treasury that the message should be sent to a Select Committee, at any rate to one which had not prejudiced the matter, as it was supposed the Committee of Ways and Means had done. He did not suppose that any gentleman on the Committee of Ways and Means, and particularly any gentleman who was opposed to the measure suggested by the President, would object to the message being sent to another Committee; as to refer it to the Committee of Ways and Means, under these circumstances, would be to put out an orphan child to an unfriendly guardian. He meant no reflection on that Committee, believing that two or three members of it were in favor of such reference. Of course, this would have committed nobody to the scheme. He had only proposed to send the subject to a Committee, which would give it a fair and just consideration. He had no unkind feeling in the matter. There was perhaps an indisposition to refer the subject to a Select Committee, and as there was now a bill before the House relating to it, he would withdraw his motion, and move that the Message be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

This was agreed to, and the Message was ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois, (Rep.,) it was resolved that the Select Committee on the Postal and Military Railroad between Washington and New-York be empowered to send for persons and papers, and examine witnesses under oath, for the purpose of ascertaining the probable cost of the construction of a road, the probable receipts from express companies and other sources, and the present receipts from these companies on the roads now constructed between the two cities.

On motion of Mr. PIKE, of Maine, (Rep.,) the Secretary of the Navy was requested to inform the House, what action, if any, should be taken relative to the appointment of midshipmen, as suggested by him in his annual report.

On motion of Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts, (Rep.,) it was resolved that the Secretary of the Navy communicate any information in his possession to show that American vessels, cleared for any foreign ports, have engaged in the coolie slave-trade, or submit such suggestions to prevent it as he may deem proper.

Mr. THOMAS, of Massachusetts, (Rep.,) from the Judiciary Committee, submitted resolutions explanatory of the tax law, that the salaries of the President, Vice-President and Judges of the Supreme Court and inferior Courts of the United States be exempted from tax.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the resolution reported from the Committee on Elections, that "WILLIAM VANDEVER has not been entitled to be sent to this House, since he was mustered into the United States service, as Colonel of the Ninth Iowa Regiment, viz., in 1861.

Mr. DAWS, of Massachusetts, (Rep.,) said the question divided itself into two branches. VANDEVER had drawn his pay both as Colonel of his regiment and member of this House. The duties of a member of Congress and of an officer of a corps were of such a character that they could not both be discharged by one and the same person, because they were under different authorities. While a member here passed on his own acts in military service, he could not act independently; for he may, by his superior officer, be ordered from his seat while on the point of casting a vote upon the conduct of his superior officer, or imposing obligations upon him. He may be required by his duty to pass on the conduct of his superior or the Commander-in-Chief; or he may be arrested, arraigned, tried and shot by a Court-martial, if so ordered. He might be called upon to vote against the longer continuance of the rules and articles of war which he himself had violated, and while he himself might be tried by Court-martial for offences which he himself had committed. Such members might be called upon to vote upon the manner in which the war should be carried on, and the vote might be so very close that the result would depend upon his vote, when, in obedience to his commanding General, he might be ordered hence. The incompatibility of the two offices in the same person is shown by all the rules of law and constitutional provisions everywhere. Mr. DAWES quoted reported decisions in point. The Constitution, he said, went further, and declared that no person holding office under the United States should be a member of either House during the continuance of said office. Whether we look at the nature of the office itself or the plain provisions of the Constitution, there did not, in the minds of the Committee on Elections, remain a doubt that, after the officer had subscribed to the rules and articles of war, the duties of the two positions were incompatible as slavery was incompatible with freedom. He is thus held to strict discipline, and no military duty can be discharged while he is in his seat as a member. Mr. DAWES maintained that the entire current of precedents were clearly conclusive on this subject. He mentioned the case of Major JOHN P. VAN NESS, whose appointment as General of the Militia of the District of Columbia necessarily vacated his seat in the House. He likewise referred to Col. BAKER, in whose case it was determined that he ceased to hold his seat from the moment he accepted his commission, during the Mexican War. Mr. DAWES, during his remarks, said the House could not be influenced by the appointments of the President. The framers of the Constitution designed and made all the departments independent, one of the other. They foresaw that some future President, while professing to adhere to the letter of the Constitution, might depart from its spirit.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, (Rep.,) moved to postpone the subject until the third Tuesday in February, as there were many important subjects to be acted upon before the close of Congress. Gen. VANDEVER had participated in the late gallant action at Arkansas Post, and possibly might return to the city before the time designated for the postponement of the subject.

Mr. DAWES did not wish to hurry a vote. The Committee received a note from Mr. VANDEVER, after they had made up their report, desiring to be heard. If any further proof was needed of the incompatibility of the two offices, he would only ask them to read the letter from VENDEVER, in which he said he could not get a furlough from his commanding officer.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, (Rep.,) in behalf of his colleague, replied to that portion of Mr. DAWS' remarks that VANDEVER had received pay both as Colonel and Member of Congress. He wished to state that the compensation which he had received as Colonel he had returned to the United States.

Mr. DAWES replied that VANDEVER did receive pay for both offices for a while.

Mr. WASHBURN'S motion to postpone was disagreed to, 53 against 74; and the resolution declaring VANDEVER not entitled to his seat was adopted.

Mr. MAYNARD, of Tennessee, (Union,) raised the question that the resolution expelled VANDEVER from his seat, and the Constitution in such cases required a vote of two-thirds.

Mr. WICKLIFFE, of Kentucky, (Dem.,) replied that the gentleman had expelled himself.

Mr. DAWES said that this could not be an expulsion, as by accepting a military appointment Mr. VANDEVER had vacated his seat.

The Speaker overruled Mr. MAYNARD'S point.

Mr. WILSON said Mr. VANDEVER served during the extra session, and a portion of the second session previous to the 20th of ——, 1861. The question raised by MAYNARD was one of such importance that it ought to be submitted to the House; because, having acted as a member, the House could not declare his seat vacant except by expulsion.

A running debate ensued, in which Messrs. ROSCOE CONKLING, DAWES, MAYNARD and WILSON participated, the last named briefly controverting the constitutional position of Mr. DAWES. Finally, Mr. MAYNARD appealed from the decision of the chair.

Pending this question, the House went into Committee of the Whole on the bill providing Ways and Means for the support of the Government.

Mr. WALKER resumed his remarks from yesterday to show that rates of interest were highest when the greatest amount of paper was in circulation.

Mr. EDWARDS, of New-Hampshire, (Rep.,) opposed the proposed national system of banking.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, (Rep.,) said if the system reported in the bill of the Committee of Ways and Means was continued at least until the end of the war, it would involve the nation in great trouble. He made no fractious opposition to it, but he deemed it his duty to state his convictions, which he proceeded to do. He expressed his belief that there was recuperative energy in this country by which we would be enabled to heal destruction on all the rebels of the South and all the traitors of the North, whether in or out of the House, who advised us to lay down our arms and sue for peace.

The Committee proceeded to act on the bill.

Mr. SPAULDING, of New-York, (Rep.,) on behalf of the Committee of Ways and Means, proposed amendments to the first section, which were agreed to, viz.: To authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to borrow from time to time, on the credit of the United States, a sum not exceeding $300,000,000 for the current fiscal year, and $600,000,000 for the next fiscal year, and to issue therefor coupon or registered bonds, payable at the pleasure of the Government after twenty years from date, and of such denominations (though not less than $50) as the Secretary may deem expedient, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 6 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually in coin.

Mr. THOMAS, of Massachusetts, (Union,) offered an amendment, which was agreed to, making the coupon or registered bonds payable at the pleasure of the Government after twenty years from date in coin.

Mr. SPAULDING moved to strike out the restriction of the sale of bonds at not less than par, so that the Secretary may, in his discretion, dispose of them at any time upon the best terms he can obtain.

Pending the consideration of this amendment, the Committee rose and the House adjourned.

THE INTERCEPTED CORRESPONDENCE.

Rebel Letters Found on Reid Sanders.

The full abstract of the correspondence found upon the person of Mr. REID SANDERS, which is given in the Washington papers, furnish some points of interest in addition to the brief telegraphic sketch already given:

A PRAYER FOR BETTER TIMES.

The formidable naval preparations making by our foe are openly avowed to be intended for the reduction of Charleston, and although our harbor is made impregnable, it is thought, still Forts Moultrie and Sumter must bear the force of the attack; to shell the garrison out from them, even should they not force their way to the city, will be their aim. I am thankful Gen. BEAUREGARD is put in command. His wise head, our tremendous fortifications and iron gunboats, which are just being completed, will enable us to meet the enemy with obstinate resistance.

Our success in Virginia has been beyond all expectation. To think of our barefooted, ragged troops gaining such victories over the well-clad, well-appointed, Lincoln hosts! but oh, my dear aunt, I cannot rejoice. Like PYRRHUS, I am attempted to say, "Another such victory would be annihilation," for it seems to me that the flower of our Southern army are being swept away; the voice of lamentation is heard in our land, for there is scarcely a home where there is not some friend or relative dead or wounded. Those of our young men who survive will be either mutilated or broken down in constitution from the hardships of this miserable war. I ought not to say a word of our deprivations, when I think of our men; but with the approaching season, arrangements must be made, necessary for the comfort of children and servants, and there is nothing to be had. I went so close to the wind last Winter, thinking that our ports would certainly be open before another, that there is nothing to exercise ingenuity upon—no flannel, no blankets to be had at any price. We have long since given up tea, coffee and sugar—only keeping a little of the last for sickness; our rice lands, too, being so guarded by the enemy's gunboats, prevent its getting to market, so corn has to be substituted in a measure; bacon, upon which we feed the servants principally, has given out to sides, and you may imagine how difficult it is for me to provide for our thirty inmates at such a time, when bare necessaries are so difficult to procure. Only think of $40 for a small box of tallow candles; we have just bought them at that price, and, in order to save them, burn lard, with a paper taper placed in it, in our chambers. Not a yard of calico long cloth, or any other goods, under prices which amount to an interdict; and yet the gentlemen tell us most cheerfully that we have not begun to feel the war yet. If it continues much longer, my slender stock will give out entirely, and how I am then to clothe the girls and myself I cannot imagine. We are manufacturing the homespuns all over the country, and many ladies are getting them woven, but the demand is so great that the supply is inadequate. I have felt very sick for the last month, suffering constant pain, and only keeping up by the force of a strong will. God help us, and give us better times soon.

GEORGE SANDERS' PRIVATE PAPERS.

That SANDERS, when in Montreal in August last, was engaged in the very laudable business of settling his indebtedness in the United States, by note, appears from the following receipt:

"Received from GEORGE N. SANDERS, Esq., his note for $13,498, in settlement of judgment obtained against him in New-York, with interest to this date, which note, when paid, will be a settlement in full of all demands I have against him to this time; but if such note is not paid, such judgment to remain in full force. W. A. TOWNSEND.

MONTREAL, Aug. 22, 1862."

In Mr. SANDERS' order book, and in memorandums, are probably a hundred orders for articles for ladies and gentlemen. Among them the following:

For Mrs. Jefferson Davis: One dozen Jouvin's gloves, No. 7s, ladies' size, dark, worked with bright colors, long in the hand, two buttons over the wrist; one dozen same, 6½, ladies; one dozen worked cambric bands; three and a half yards Valenciennes lace, five inches wide, nearly straight edge; one whole piece Val. lace, one inch wide.

TO MINISTER MASON.

A daughter of Mr. MASON, writing to him, says:

"Winchester is not a bit nearer subjugated than it was a year ago; on the contrary, the people are only more determined and firm. A gentleman from Clarke County told me that the largest crop he had heard of, as being planted, was thirty or forty acres of wheat, by Mr. GEORGE BURWELL. All that section of country has been so desolated, and the servants brought off, that the people cannot live there much longer; but if the war continues for six months, many of them must leave their homes for want of the means of living, the constant presence of both armies having consumed everything. I hear, however, there is a good deal of wheat still remaining there of the last two crops, but you know man cannot live by bread alone."

MISCELLANEOUS INDICATIONS.

The following are isolated paragraphs from various letters, giving a view of the interior life of the Confederacy:

"Isn't this a terrible war—we are heartily tired of it, and as yet no prospect of peace. I wish we were all with you. Richmond is very much altered, and there is the greatest spirit of extortion among our once liberal and hospitable community.

By all means stay in Europe until there is a much better state of things existing in this country. This is my parting word of advice, and prompted by good reasons."

The following is to a gentleman in Kentucky from his brother in TEXAS:

"I have expected all the time you and BILLY would join us, and I still look for you. My God, can you two stand still in such a crisis? Be up and at work—leave the rotten concern—come out where white men and not negroes are looked up to!

Dear ELLEN, I often think of her.—I hope Bob did not join the Northern army, as I first heard—if so, I am done with him. It is death or success with us—no other alternative will do.

I have prayed fervently for the redemption of Kentucky. BRECKINRIDGE is a noble fellow—he has elevated himself high in my favor."

In the memorandum-book of Mr. SANDERS are the following names, probably of sympathizers:

"Miss Tupper, No. 11 Granite-street, Halifax.
Miss Louisa Sanders, No. 11 Granite-street.
B. Wise & Co., Commission Merchant.
Robert Southale, Trafalgar Hotel, London.
Lewis H. Bayne, Baltimore, Banker.
Yale College is the address of our friend, James M."

JOHN MITCHELL, the "Irish patriot," in one of his letters, tells his wife to address him, "under cover, to Mr. EDWARD MCADAM, Baltimore, Md., U. S., and I will get it some time."

"W. J." writes from Warrenton, N. C. He says: "HOLLANGHEN is jolly, but disgusted at the slowness of the Government. Much obliged for the box—if it arrives will be great help, for everything is tremendous high. Board is $80 per week generally. You know I was obliged to draw the £200. Will be very prudent."

Mrs. L. F. GILMER, of Atlanta, Ga., writes to Mrs. C. C. KENNEY, of Mr. WILLIAM ALVORD, San Francisco, Cal., that she is "consuming with an unappeasable hunger to hear and know something about them." The letter is very long. She complains much at not having received answers to letters from friends in California to whom she had written. She wrote four times to the wife of one of our distinguished Major-Generals, but got no answer. She complains of Major MACKALL who was a prisoner at Fort Warren, in Boston, for a long while. The only person he heard from while a prisoner was a young lady of New-Hampshire who wrote to him. The Major returned from his captivity looking "better than ever." He was so fat, Mrs. GILMER adds, "that you would almost call him stout." About the last of November he passed through Atlanta to take command at Mobile.

Maj. WM. NORRIS, of the rebel signal corps, under date of Richmond, Dec. 15, writes as follows:

"Several Englishmen have recently received passes through our lines from me, and have all promised to call and see you. Col. FLETCHER, Fusileer Guards, left yesterday by the underground railroad. Mr. COXSON left some days since.

If we fail to drive the Federal army back to Washington again, we will burn Richmond to the ground and fall back to the mountains. Our men are ragged, ill-fed, outnumbered three to one, bare-footed and bareheaded. I refer you to the history of the times for what they have done. As yet, I am ashamed to say that I have not even received a scratch.

You must read the London Times and look at the London Illustrated News. All of VERESTILLY'S letters and drawings pass through my command, and they are all admirable."

FROM TRENTON, N. J.

Gov. Parker's Inaugural—Probable Extinguishment of the Peace Resolutions—Repentant Democrats—The House Committees, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

TRENTON, Tuesday, Jan. 20, 1863.

The event of the day has been the inauguration of Gov. PARKER, and the delivery of his address to the Legislature. The inaugural ceremonies were carried out after the programme published yesterday morning in the TIMES. The address was delivered from the south portico of the State House, to a very large assemblage. The address was of inordinate length, and treated of a great variety of subjects, a noticeable feature being, that while State affairs were dismissed with a breath, all the questions of National polity are discussed with the most discursive comprehensiveness, and with an elaboration of argument which shows conclusively that Gov. PARKER, at least, imagined the eyes of the nation to be upon him, and the universal ear strained to catch his dicta upon the great points in dispute. I wish I could say that the matter of the address was of importance commensurate with its length. The synopsis I send will enable you to judge of its merits. It bears a close resemblance in its general line of argument to the message of Gov. SEYMOUR, and the conclusions at which it arrives are identical with those of that document. The most that can be said of it is, that it is a singular illustration of the old folly of small politicians, of attempting to sit on two stools at once, and its author will probably experience the usual fate of those who attempt that awkward and impossible feat It contains too little sting for the radical Democrats, while it deals far too gingerly with secession and rebellion to command the respect of loyal men. The Governor, it is comfortable to say, after all his rhodomontade, comes to the conclusion that the war is a necessity, so long as rebellion is persisted in, and that no violation of constitutional rights by the Government absolves the State or individual from constitutional obligations or fealty. This is the only grain of wheat in all the Governor's nine or ten columns of chaff.

I think I may confidently assure you that the peace resolutions will not pass, and I shall be much surprised if they are not referred, when they come up, to a Select Committee on National Affairs, who will quietly consign them to mental oblivion.

Prominent Democrats do not hesitate to express their contempt for the craven spirit displayed by these abject resolutions, and if the defection goes on as it now seems to be progressing, there will be a very meagre vote for the propositions.

The election of JAMES W. WALL, as United States Senator, under the fierce pressure of an excitement which did not stop to calculate consequences, is now, when sober reflection has resumed its sway, likely to prove one of those acts, which done in haste, can be repented of at leasure. It is an evil which may eventuate in a blessing. If the reaction shall secure the election of a good Union Democrat for the long term, the State of New-Jersey may well be thankful, even for the opportunity given WALL to exhibit his vagaries for a few weeks in the Senate.

The House Committees were appointed yesterday afternoon, and their fairness is not disputed by any.

THE INAUGURATION CEREMONIES.

SYNOPSIS OF GOV. PARKER'S ADDRESS.

The military formed in line, and consisted of twelve companies of infantry, two squadrons of cavalry and two companies of artillery.

A salute was fired at 11½ o'clock, when the procession moved for the State House.

Around the State House an immense crowd of people were in waiting, to receive the Governor, and greeted him with the most enthusiastic cheers.

The Governor elect was conducted to the desk of the President of the Senate, where the oath of office was administered to him, and the seal of the State handed over to him by Gov. OLDEN.

After some religious services, Gov. PARKER was escorted to the south part of the State House, where, in the presence of a dense mass of people, he delivered his inaugural address.

The address starts out with an elaborate review of State affairs; urges the strictest economy; favors the cause of education; urges a thorough revision of the State military system; calls attention to the soldiers of New-Jersey; urges that every comfort should be provided for them, and that their families should be liberally provided for; urges the prompt payment of the money due the soldiers, and a thorough examination of the army hospitals, and their abuses thoroughly removed.

Much space is devoted to National affairs. He refers to the promptness of New-Jersey in furnishing men and money for the war, and thinks it is our most solemn duty to examine into the causes of the war.

He discusses the nature of our Government, and declares that each State expressly retains its sovereignty, and that every right and power not expressly delegated to the United States is secured to the States.

The sovereignty of each State is as complete and real in its sphere as the sovereignty of the United States in its sphere.

The United States supervises the external affairs of the people in their relations to other nations, while to the respective States is committed local self-government, having reference chiefly to the domestic relations, including the protection of life, liberty, and the property of the citizens.

It is the duty of the States, as well as of the United States, to assert and maintain their sovereignty.

The framers of the Constitution, in their wisdom, supposed that sufficient powers were surrendered and granted to the General Government to answer all the ends for which it was created, whether in peace or war.

It was not provided that the Constitution should be only for a time of peace, and that in war there should be a power above the Constitution, limited only by individual opinion and discretion.

The reserved rights of the people of the States were to be respected at all times, and especially in times of discord and angry strife. In cases of doubt the doctrine was always against enlarged powers.

The Governor then refers to our national prosperity under the doctrine "of the power of the Constitution."

He contends that secession is unconstitutional; that it is not based on the right of revolution, but on the alleged right of a State to constitutionally withdraw from the Union. This is political heresy. It was unknown to the framers of the Constitution. In the Articles of Confederation the original States expressly plighted their faith that the Union should be perpetual, and the Constitution followed only to make a more perfect Union. The States ratified the Constitution with this distinct understanding—that the Union was not to depend on the will of any one of the parties alone. The idea was that this was to be a permanent Government.

The Governor next argues that there was not sufficient cause for the revolution.

He then refers to the fanaticism in the North, saying it was calculated to produce the bitterest hatred on the part of the Southern people; but that they had committed, in return, retaliatory measures of violence, which were illegal and entirely unjustifiable.

In this way, a minority of ultra and fanatical men in each section, controlling the current of events, had brought this great and good Government, the first and best ever devised by man, to the verge of destruction.

In this sorrowful state of affairs New-Jersey has taken no part, but to assert and show her loyalty on all occasions.

The Governor then proceeded to denounce "arbitrary arrests."

The purpose of the war was declared by all loyal people to be the maintenance of the Constitution and the protection of the rights of the citizen. They did not expect that the Constitution was so impotent that its supremacy could only be maintained by a violation of its provisions.

The Governor here gives a recital of a number of arrests and the arbitrary manner in which they were made, and insisted that such acts were in clear violation of the provisions of the Constitution, in violation of the rights of the people, and not called for by the exigencies of the case. He adds, "Whatever legal powers are vested in the Governor shall be exerted for the protection of the lawful rights of the citizens of this State."

The right to suspend the writ of habeas corpus, he declares, belongs exclusively to the Legislative and Executive branches of the Government. It was never in the breast of any one individual, and it is so declared in the Constitution.

The Governor then discusses the "war power," and declares that the plea of "military necessity" is illegal and dangerous.

The Emancipation Proclamation is classed as among the illegal acts of this new principle of the "war power." He then goes on to argue the impracticability of the scheme, declares that it will prolong the war, and adds: "Our energies should be directed to save the Union, leaving emancipation acts to the Legislatures of the States."

He concludes with some wholesome advice as to controlling our passions and as to the respect due to the rights of others.

He hopes for the speedy conclusion of the war and the restoration of peace, and says that, "It should be a peace on the basis of the Union as it was"—a union of all the States with their equality and rights unimpaired."

The Governor was frequently enthusiastically applauded during the delivery of his address, and upon its conclusion the procession of citizens and soldiers again formed in line and escorted him to his quarters.

Another Emancipation Jubilee.

Last evening the second jubilee meeting, in honor of the President's Emancipation Proclamation, was held in the large hall of the Cooper Institute, Mr. JOHN PETERSON, colored, occupying the Chair After Rev. J. C. LOCKWOOD, from Fortress Monroe, had offered up a prayer, the Chairman explained the object of the meeting, and said that the anniversary of Jan. 1, 1863, would always be held as a jubilee, for on that day ABE LINCOLN, stigmatized as the "rail-splitter," knocked Slavery, with his Governmental axe, into pieces much smaller than rails.

Rev. J. R. W. SLOANE praised ABRAHAM LINCOLN for issuing the Proclamation, enlarging upon its importance, and asserting that there would be no turning back till unconditional freedom had been secured to all. He hailed the present year as the year of jubilee, and said Amen to the President's Proclamation.

Mr. THEODORE TILTON, after indorsing the President's Proclamation, said that if a black man was given a musket he would soon obtain a sword. If the President had said anything about colonization, the black man would have said no. If anything had been said about colonization, the colored people might ask—as Sir WALTER SCOTT'S servant asked him, when he told him they must part—"Where are the whites to go?" If it were a military necessity to emancipate the slaves in all the States except the Border States, it was equally a military necessity to emancipate the slaves in Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri and Western Virginia, the battle ground of our armies—and by not doing so the grandeur of the President's act was much diminished.

Now the Emancipation edict has gone forth, the result will soon be that over our mutual rejoicings the God of Freedom will smile, and peace and righteousness shall kiss each other.

Addresses were also made by Mr. OLIVER JOHNSON, T. MORRIS CHESTER, (colored,) and Rev. HENRY HIGHLAND GARNET, minister of the Colored Church in Marion-street. A band of colored musicians were in attendance, and enlivened the meeting by many patriotic airs.
